Democratic Exec. Committee,
Dallas, Texas.

My Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your letter of recent date making inquiry as to whether, in my opinion, the delegates to the San Francisco Convention should endorse or repudiate the achievements of the National Administration.

Replying, will say that in my judgment such delegates should support a resolution endorsing the achievements of the National Administration.

Sincerely yours,
Marvin Jones.

Similar letters have been received from both of the United States Senators from Texas, C. A. Culberson and Morris Sheppard, and from sixteen of the eighteen Texas Congressmen.

CITY COUNCIL MEETS

Hedley's new City Council has taken up the reins of government and will pilot our municipal craft the ensuing twelve months.

They held their first regular business meeting last Friday evening, Mayor Jones and Aldermen Forbis, Alexander, Pierce and Newman being present.

R. E. Newman was chosen City Secretary and A. W. Alexander was named Acting Mayor—or to act as Mayor in that officer's absence. An Ordinance was passed and appears in this issue of The Informer.

We are expecting some good things to happen during this administration. Already some interesting projects are under way and showing favorable progress. We will have something to say about these, and others, in the near future.

DENTAL WORK AT REDUCED PRICES

This is to inform you that I am reserving from this date until May 15 for a reduction in crown and bridge work. You will never have an opportunity to secure first class work on the terms given by me from this date until 4 o'clock May 15th.

You had better grasp this opportunity and have your teeth fixed up while you can do so at a reduced price. You can replace those teeth that have been lost with bridge work, and save those which are decayed and badly worn off by crowning them before it is too late.

Remember the date and act before prices advance again.
Yours very truly,
F. N. Reynolds, D. D. S.

Some Banks advertise—that's all.

But it is the policy of this institution to extend to each customer as much liberality as his standing will permit. Then stay with him, and we meet at all times.

GLORIOUS! I'M NOT BILIOUS NOW!

Yesterday I was Sick, Headachy, Constipated but I took "Dodson's Liver Tone"—not Sickening Calomel!

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated. You feel headachy, your stomach may be sour, your breath bad, your skin sallow and you believe you need vile, dangerous Calomel to start liver and bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful tonight. If it doesn't start your liver and straighten you right up better than Calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Take Calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and wake up feeling splendid. It is perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate.—Adv.

Wild Dogs Devour Sheep. Depredations by packs of wild dogs are causing Australian sheep owners heavy damage, according to official reports received at Washington. A delegation of stockmen recently submitted to the minister of public lands of New South Wales statistics showing a loss of 50,000 sheep in that province alone in the course of a few months. The delegation requested government aid in the erection of a "dogproof" fence to isolate a district comprising almost 40,000 square miles.

Lift Off Corns!

Doesn't hurt! Lift touchy corns and calluses right off with fingers

Apply a few drops of "Freezone" upon that old, bothersome corn. Instantly that corn stops hurting. Then shortly you lift it right off, root and all, without pain or soreness.

Hard corns, soft corns, corns between the toes, and the hard skin calluses on bottom of foot lift right off—no humbug!

Tiny bottles of "Freezone" cost but a few cents at drug stores

WHAT HE SHOULD HAVE SAID

Reporter Had Much to Learn About Proper Method of Referring to Different Speakers.

"I'm afraid you won't do for us," said the editor, controlling his temper with an effort, as he eyed the new reporter coldly.

"Why not, sir?" asked the reporter in surprise.

"Well, you said you had had considerable experience as a political reporter."

"So I have," retorted the scribe.

"Then why on earth did you make use of such unjournalistic language in this report. You said that 'Mr. William Blank addressed the meeting.'"

"Well, isn't that right?"

"Right!" the editor's voice was torn with scorn. "It's all wrong. One would imagine that the meeting was in support of our candidate instead of the opposition."

"What difference does that make? How should I have—"

"Why, 'Bill Blank next harangued mob,' of course."—London Answer.

"Well, pa, my Sunday school says that the Lord will supply what I don't mind waiting."—Answer.

CITY PEOPLE "EASY MARKS"

Many Bestowed Aims on Beggar for Whom Lusty Youth Was Engaged in "Barking."

Since efficiency is finding its way into all business one of the oldest "professions" of all has begun to adopt modern methods. The innovation is due to a beggar who made his stand opposite one of the subway entrances along the Williamsburg bridge approach on Delancey street, the New York Evening Sun states.

Many who passed this spot recently were struck by the appearance of this beggar, an elderly, long-bearded man, who sat huddled up in a wheel chair. Alongside was a husky youth of nineteen or so, busily engaged in "barking" for the beggar. Secretly the latter must have thought it a good joke on the alms-giving public, for there was always a snarl on his face, as his friend shouted so none should neglect to drop a coin in the beggar's lap. His "spiel" was in Yiddish, which, roughly translated into English, would be:

"Stop! Give charity, people."

Many who ought to have known better stopped and gave.

Facts are stubborn things, but not as stubborn as the uplifter to whom they are an obstacle.

When Nature takes a vacation it is sometimes one of a million years. She isn't making any more zantodons.

The Soul of Constantinople

Aya Sophia.

WHEN Constantinople passes out of Turkish hands what, the religious world asks, will become of Aya Sofia? Is it to remain a place of Moslem worship, or will that "greatest temple after St. Peter's" be rededicated to Christian use? So asks E. A. N. Valentine in Los Angeles Times.

Whatever be the tolerance shown the creed of the Arab prophet in the Constantinople of the future, it is almost certain the cross will supersede the crescent on Justinian's splendid monument to early Christianity. Its new consecration to the purposes for which it was reared is a duty owed the memory of its illustrious founder.

Not even St. Peter's outrivals Aya Sofia in interest. Its history is inseparable, not only with Constantinople itself, but with Christianity. The creation of Byzantium as the seat of the eastern Roman empire by Constantine the Great had a religious as well as a political motive. Made a convert to the teachings of the Nazarene by the "In hoc signo vinces" vision, he resolved to establish a new capital in which that faith should have exclusive sway, and his first act was to lay the foundations of the original basilica of "The Divine Wisdom" on which the present fane was rebuilt by his descendant, the author of the "Pandeects." Byzantium was to be what Rome is today. It was through this successor of the Caesars and his Church of Aya Sofia, the See of the Greek Patriarchs, that Christianity attained her first great triumph over paganism.

Aya Sofia may well be called the soul of Constantinople—the heartbeat of its long history—it has figured in all its various chapters of vicissitudes, its variegated romance, on which rests an exotic bloom richer than any intentions of fancy.

On One of Seven Hills. The cupola and flanking minarets of Aya Sofia, familiarized by paintings and photography, are what first catch the eye in approaching Constantinople by water. Dawn or sunset hour is the most favorable moment for that approach, the impressions of which stir the pulse of even the most sophisticated traveler. Visioned at dawn, with the city wrapped in light mist, faintly touched by blushes of a still hidden sun, the many mosques of Stamboul appear almost aerial, seem like vast rose-tinged soap bubbles afloat on the filmy sea, insubstantial as the fabric of dream, like the phantasmagoria evoked by hashish-eaters.

Aya Sofia occupies one of the seven hills of Stamboul, that congested quarter of true Turkeydom, lying on the site of old Byzantium, on the Asiatic shore and separated from Galata-Pera, the cosmopolitan quarter, by the Golden Horn and from Skutari by the Bosphorus. Of these superb summits it has the nearest and most commanding location. One sees it from almost every point of Constantinople and its environs. Yet like most else in the city, its view does not enhance its beauty. When one has gazed upon it on which it is situated longer like a pleasure-dome, it is like a silver-sheathed cube, both its silvery airiness and proportions; the irregularity of its four minarets, the ornate details, lacks warmth and is confused in design.

Justinian's church, in the opinion of some, is the finest example of the Byzantine style.

where the Turk performs his unconquering ablution before prayer, into the mosque, one is at once impressed with what the glory of Aya Sofia must have been. Its cost of $3,000,000 was enormous for the times, and such a drain on the exchequer of the empire that rigid economies in various departments were necessitated. One hundred thousand workmen were engaged in the construction, which was achieved in five years.

Besides the amazing display of mosaic it is a liberal education in marbles. Marble of every kind known to the ancient world is there—marble of divers hues—black, green, cream and rose—marble veined, dappled, variegated and starred, marble from the near mines of Marmora, from Greece and Asia Minor, from Egypt, even from Ultima Thule. Famous temples were ravished to supply the innumerable pillars of the galleries and the pilasters of the walls. Some of these are from the Temple of the Sun at Baalbek; others from Thebes, from Palmyra, from Athens, from Rome itself.

The structure, with its porches and side aisles, is rectangular, and besides its main dome is roofed by minor vaults. It is the vest cupola of the nave that carries one away by its suggestion of a vast inverted abyss. The least ponderable of practicable material was needed to sustain it; and this was found in volcanic pumice and Rhodian brick, that weigh but a fifth of the common variety.

The dome, and indeed the whole interior of Aya Sofia, is mosaic lined, representing Christ, the apostles and legions of saints. The Turk, whose religion abhors human representations, covered these with gilded wash that, grown thin, suffers this Byzantium art to re-emerge in spots. Cartouches with sentences from the prophet and rosettes of gold have been stuck here and there, and the childish decoration of ostrich eggs, together with bronze lamps and glass globes, the lattice work of the women's galleries, the inlaid minber or pulpit; the lecterns with old costly Korans open on them, the looped green linen with Arabic inscriptions hanging by silken cords from the ceiling, priceless carpets on the wall, the Minrab indicating the direction of Mecca, all proclaim the Mussulman's house of prayer.

Ornament She Hadn't Noticed. Thirty years ago we used to wear our hats for several years, and each year about November we got out our winter hat and felt just as proud as if it was new, writes a correspondent of the Chicago American. On one occasion I was wearing a four-year-old hat that had been boxed for two years. I have one peculiarity and that is: "Never look in a mirror."

So when I took a front seat at church that day I noticed people in general had on a smile that didn't wear off.

I never dreamed it was anything about my hat, but when I took it off in my bedroom, there on the top was a mud dauber's nest as big as a baseball.

Siberian Industries. According to the statistics of the ministry of trade and industry, covering nine governments and provinces in Siberia and the governments of Tern and Orenburg, there were subject to inspection in 1918, 1,568 industrial plants, with 601,201 employees and an annual production of more than 401,778,182 roubles. Of these 779 were plants making foodstuffs with 14,543 employees, and annual production amounting to 158,336,614 roubles.

COMMON ANCESTOR TO BLAME

Unightly "Apple" is a Legacy Bequeathed to His Posterity by Old Father Adam.

We all "hate it in" for Adam for shutting to our faces the gates of the Garden of Eden. But many of us, though we may not know it, bear a particular resemblance to this common ancestor that puts another chip on the shoulder. For it is generally conceded that an "Adam's apple" is no aid to beauty. And besides making of our Paradise a cold, bare world, it is Adam who inflicted upon us this additional burden. When our common progenitor took the fatal bite that forever doomed the rest of us to existence by the sweat of our brows, a piece of the fruit is supposed to have lodged in his throat and stuck there in his children's children unto the 10th generation. And that is why the slight protuberance that some people have at the front of the throat is called "Adam's apple!" Speaking of ancestry, some of us carry about on our persons unmistakable proof of our ancient lineage.—Chicago Journal.

New Wireless Distress Call. A novel wireless emergency device by which ships in distress can ring alarm bells on other ships within wireless range is reported by the American chamber of commerce in London.

The present wireless system of communication requires that an operator to hear a call must be on duty, wearing the usual telephone headpiece. The new device is said to enable any station or ship equipped with a special automatic transmitter key to call up any station or ship within range, fitted with a corresponding receiver relay, even if the operator is absent.

The calling up, according to the American chamber, is effected by a bell which starts ringing on the ships called.

It is claimed that one of the most important uses of the device will be to insure immediate and general attention to S. O. S. calls.

In the Cyclone Belt. The difficulty of finding a house is not exclusively an Eastern problem. Out in Kansas, for instance, a native observed a stranger looking around and ventured to say, "Good morning, sir. House hunting?"

"Yes," replied the stranger. "I wonder if it could have blown this far."—Boston Transcript.

Glad to Try Anything
"Three years ago my system was in a terribly run down condition and I was broken out all over my body. I began to be worried about my condition and I was glad to try anything which would relieve me. Peruna was recommended to me as a fine blood remedy and tonic, and I soon found that it was worthy of praise. A few bottles changed my condition materially and in a short time I was all over my trouble. I owe my restoration to health and strength to Peruna. I am glad to endorse it."

J. M. Saxon, Box 147, Ocala, Fla., wrote Jan. 22, 1919: "I used a bottle of your Dr. Thacher's Liver and Blood Syrup in my family with a four-year-old child that had had kidneys, caused by measles. Found it to be more good than all the medicines that I ever got hold of."

"One day a lady came into the store to buy some music, and after I had played several pieces to her, I told her I would play one of Caruso's. After I had played the piece, she said: 'Cruso, Cruso; why I have heard a great deal about him and Friday, but I never knew that he sang.'"

HURRY! YOUR HAIR NEEDS "DANDERINE"

Get rid of every bit of that ugly dandruff and stop falling hair.

To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a small bottle of "Danderine" on any drug or toilet counter for a few cents, pour a little in your hand and rub well into the scalp. After several applications all dandruff usually goes and hair stops coming out. Every hair in your head soon shows new life, vigor, brightness, thickness and more color.—Adv.

Fairies Might Envy Her

If we were in a world where there was nothing to do but look our best, women would clothe their daughters in white, most of the time. But this is a grimy dwelling place for most of us and white must be immaculate, therefore cannot be indulged in half as often as we wish. Only the baby is allowed the joyous privilege of always going in white and that for a brief few months. But every member of the family is occasionally privileged and white dresses are associated with happy events in life from childhood on.

With the return to high favor of fine cottons, we find party frocks for little girls and flappers, made in organdy in such lovely designs as that shown in the picture. Once again exquisite Swiss embroideries and narrow dainty laces find themselves in company with fine tucks in by hand, and other painstaking needlework. There is not so much work in making these dresses, because they are so simply designed, but this work is done with beautiful neatness—and there is nothing like sheer white in fabrics and handwork in making, when one undertakes to achieve refinement in a dress.

The dress shown here is suited to a girl of ten to fourteen years. The straight skirt is laid in double box plaits, front and back, and has a four-inch hem, with a cluster of fine tucks above it. Each tuck is a little over an inch wide. There is a plain bodice with a panel of fine tucks and narrow Val insertion, at the front and back. Embroidery borders the panel at the sides and bottom and a ribbon sash is ingeniously set under the embroidery. The ribbon is brought through slashes at each side, forming short loops at the front. In the back it is tied in a bow and ends. The sleeves are finished with both insertion and edging of Val. Such a frock will stand much laundering and is crisp and dainty enough to make a fairy envy its wearer.

For Now and Later On

FASHION appears never to frown upon taffeta and continues to smile invitingly on combinations of wool and satin, in afternoon frocks. Here are two new models for the first glance quite different from the other.

all in the making of the sweet frocks at the right. Its two flounces and the bottom of the skirt are bordered with a double plaiting of the silk, joined along the center, and the sleeves are finished in the same way. It is a wide skirt and simple, short-sleeved frock, joined by a narrow belt of a light color makes a frock. In dark blue, and other daytime colors, model for afternoon.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF BLACK-DRAUGHT

Black-Draught Highly Recommended by Illinois Man for Liver and Stomach Disorders.—Used It for Fifteen Years.

Singerton, Ill.—"For fifteen years we have used Theodor's Black-Draught, and have not as yet found anything that could take its place," writes Mr. W. F. Rister, of this town, "I have used it for indigestion a number of times, and it gives relief," continues Mr. Rister.

"For sour stomach, a heavy, bloated feeling, it is splendid. And when the liver gets torpid, so that when you stoop and raise up suddenly you feel dizzy, a few doses will set you straight."

"We keep it and use for constipation and the above troubles, and find it most satisfactory. I can recommend it to others and gladly do so. For the number of years I have used Black-Draught now, I ought to know."

In its 70 years of usefulness, Theodor's Black-Draught has relieved thousands and thousands of persons suffering from the results of a disordered liver. And, like Mr. Rister, many people feel that, after using Black-Draught nothing can take its place.

If you haven't tried Black-Draught get a package today. Nearly every druggist keeps it.—Adv.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments; corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

"EVEN STEPHEN!"

Synopsis.—Dick Morgan of Syracuse, N. Y., a failure in life, enlisted in the Foreign Legion of the French army under the name of Henry Hilliard, is disgraced by shrapnel. The French surgeons ask for a photograph to guide them in restoring his face. In his rage against life he offers in derision a picture postcard bearing the radiant face of Christ. The surgeons do a good job. On his way back to America he meets Martin Harmon, a New York broker. The result is that Morgan, under the name of Hilliard and unrecognized as Morgan, goes back to Syracuse to sell a mining stock. He is determined to make good. He tells people of the death of Morgan. He finds in Angela Cullen a loyal defender of Dick Morgan. He meets Carol Durant, who had refused to marry him. She does not hesitate to tell him that she had loved Morgan.

It was perhaps five minutes before that door was reopened, and during the interval, Hilliard had an opportunity to wonder if the doctor had revised his office hours; otherwise, he should now be down in the Physicians' building, receiving patients. It occurred spontaneously to Hilliard that both Carol and her father were conceivably harassed by confinement, but as he estimated the extent to which their sorrow might go . . . Judging by Carol's distress of last night, and the potential tragedy of the doctor today—he was possessed of gripping emotions. Had they cared so deeply for him, then? Angela and Carol had said so; but he had doubted what he most wanted to believe. Was this additional proof? Had the doctor cared so deeply that in order to hold converse with Dick Morgan's sole executor, he would interrupt the sacred routine of his practice? Too late! Too late to care, too late to sympathize, only the winter garment of repentance was left for them! Hilliard couldn't comprehend why, when he had risen this morning so refreshed in mind and body, he should now be so unutterably wearied in both.

Carol returned, followed by a gentleman of sixty; and as the doctor entered, the room was suddenly permeated by an atmosphere of calm, and kindly peace. He was a large man, large of feature, and large of instinct; his forehead was that of an intellectualist; his eyes were those of a dreamer; his chin denoted rugged capabilities, and the stubbornness of unswerving ethics.

"Mr. Hilliard?" His voice was pitched low, but its resonance was striking. Thirty years ago the doctor had been a famous baritone; and there was still one church in town which dated its musical supremacy from the choir he had organized and directed.

"Doctor Durant?" The two men clasped hands frilly. Hilliard, experiencing the dreaded sinking sensation which came upon him as often as he exposed himself to yet another old acquaintance, hardened as he perceived no recognition in the doctor's eyes. The inevitable reaction left him momentarily weak.

"It was good of you to take this trouble, Mr. Hilliard. I appreciate it. Hilliard's denial was highly courteous; it was harder to hate the doctor than he had planned.

"No, doctor—it would only have been blamable if I hadn't."

"I insist that it's good of you. . . . You knew Dick intimately, I understand."

thing he did is a fact. I'm proud of him for it—and so far, for that, and for that only. But it isn't true that by itself alone it made him a hero. And when I said that I'm interested in the lesser facts, I mean that Dick's reasons for going into the war at all may be the proof that he was a hero—and that any physical bravery he may have shown has nothing whatsoever to do with it. Please don't misjudge us. We're not trying to belittle anything Dick did; it's neither fitting nor possible. But what we want to know is where the credit lies—with Dick, a reasoning, inspired, determined man, or with Dick, intoxicated by danger. In the latter case, his heroism would appeal to us as a detached incident, having no relation to his earlier life or to our own; it would be something to bring us pride for that, but for nothing else. In the other case, the knowledge of the why, in addition to the what, would bring us . . . But about Dick?"

"You can be happy, then," said Hilliard unhesitatingly, "because he went over, I believe, in the firm conviction that every man has two countries—his own and France."

"Yes?" The doctor sat down abruptly.

"As long as you're interested in what he did before he was wounded—"

"And afterward, Mr. Hilliard."

"Rather than how he was hurt, let me assure you that as far as I know, from the first day he landed, I don't believe he thought once about his own misfortunes. He had them, I know. But if you've got any manhood in you, you can't think of your own troubles, over there. It's too fearful. The Carol-Dakin solution heals all sorts of wounds, Doctor Durant, all but the worst wound of all—and that's what every man who has any humanity and any sympathy about him gets when he first sees France. His heart is torn clear out of him. He can't sleep, he can hardly live with his own thoughts. And that quiet resolution you speak about—it's enough if it comes to a man there! I don't care what he had in his mind when he left you; I don't care what it was that led him to go overseas; I don't care what his purpose was when he sailed; I know that when he stood on French soil there wasn't an atom of selfishness or self-pity in him. It wasn't a question of adventure; it wasn't a question of drowning his sorrows; it was a question of his doing anything and everything he could to help out. Let me tell you something," Hilliard sat on the edge of his chair. "It's possible that you never thought of Dick Morgan either as a martyr or a fatalist. Nor do I think he was. But when he was brought to Neuilly there was among his papers a little sort of field diary—I'm sorry it was lost, so I haven't it to show to you, but I saw it often—and under the date of his first tour of duty in the front line trenches was scribbled this, quoted from Rousseau: 'The dead carry to the grave, in their clutched fingers, only that which they have given away.' Doctor Durant, Dick went into this war in the belief that the only way to reclaim his life was to sacrifice it. Does that answer your question?"

There was an utter stillness. It had been a superb fiction, but Hilliard demically—if you didn't go so far beyond the actual facts?"

"How do you mean?"

"Why," said Hilliard, "for one thing, in laying so much stress on his grandparents, Dick was the one who went overseas; his grandparents didn't! And his grandparents didn't go into action on the western front sizzling Stevenson's 'Requiem' at the top of their lungs and knowing that it was mighty appropriate, as Dick did!"

"What?" said Carol, straightening.

"What's that?"

"No," the doctor's negative was quiet, but decisive. "A man doesn't rise to heights of glory without some reason for it, Mr. Hilliard. But a man can resist his inheritance for a good many years, and suddenly stop resisting and revert to his family type. He can do it voluntarily or involuntarily. It's what we call atavism." He paused and smiled sadly. "The pity of it," he said, "is that in spite of his having failed in everything he tried to do in Syracuse, he would have made us proud of him, sooner or later, if he had stayed on here. I'm positive of that."

"Pity!" Hilliard straightened. This was the third time in two days that he had caught the intimation that he could have come home decently and humbly and been forgiven.

"Not that I pity him for what he accomplished, or what it cost him," warned the doctor. "I don't; I was very fond of the boy, Mr. Hilliard, but I wouldn't for the world have had him do anything else than what he did. No—but I do pity him because he can never know what we think; because he can never know how much we gladly forget; because he can never know why we are proud of him."

Hilliard's pupils were distended.

"You were rather harsh with him, doctor, as I—"

"We were just, Mr. Hilliard."

"But if you recall the gist of Portia's speech . . ."

"I do!" The doctor regarded him pacifically. "And it's very seldom that mercy is asked to temper justice except after it's become evident that justice is actually going to be just. Let's not deceive ourselves. And let's not put each other in the position either of attacking or defending Dick. It's not the time for that now. He's done all that any man can do, and he was a most lovable boy—most lovable."

Hilliard nervously addressed himself to Carol.

"I hope you agree with your father, Miss Durant—that eventually he'd have succeeded in Syracuse?"

"I never doubted it," she said loyally.

And then the three of them fell simultaneously to musing, and for the space of a minute or two there was quiet; the sort of quiet which comes just after the benediction. It was the benediction which Carol had bestowed upon a wretched siner who sat there wondering how he could ever escape from the toils of his own cleverness.

"How long are you to be in town, Mr. Hilliard?" inquired the doctor, irrelevantly.

"That I can't say, sir. I had no other errand than this."

"You've never been here before? That is, you haven't friends here?"

He had expected this question and prepared for it.

"Several years ago," he said casually. "I came to Syracuse half a dozen times one winter—on business. I suppose I could find my way around even now, if I had to. But comparatively speaking, I'm a stranger."

"You're a business man, Mr. Hilliard?"

"I told you he was, dear," said Carol.

Hilliard nodded.

"Yes, Doctor Durant. That is—I have no business connections now. That's why my plans are so uncertain."

Again a heavy silence. Hilliard was cursing the impetuous haste which had caused him to tie himself into an invulnerable network.

"I'm sorry," said the doctor, rising abruptly, "but I've a consultation at half-past twelve. Thank you again, Mr. Hilliard, for coming to us; you've lightened my heart tremendously. I hope we shall see you again before you go."

"I hope so," said Hilliard, dully. He was whipping his brain to find a way out; but how could he explain those manifold, cruel falsehoods which once he had thought to be his retribution?

The doctor gave him a cordial smile, a parting pressure of the hand, and went out directly, leaving the two young people quite alone.

Hilliard, impelled to go and equally constrained to stay, fidgeted in his vacillation. He was uncomfortable and unhappy, yet curiously enough he had no inclination to depart. He assured himself that he cared not for the snap of his finger for Carol Durant; on the contrary, he was intolerant of her very presence; still he lingered, wishing that he hadn't stifled himself in the past.

"What's That?"

thinking obliquely of Angela, was only partly sentient of his baseness.

"Thank you," said the doctor, and glanced at his daughter. "Yes, He made the making of a splendid man. I knew his parents and his grandparents. His career in Syracuse hadn't anything to do with his heredity, Mr. Hilliard; it was the result of badly broken environment. He chose it when he had all a young man's temptations. But when those were removed, he had to be true to himself."

"I don't care what he had in his mind when he left you; I don't care what it was that led him to go overseas; I don't care what his purpose was when he sailed; I know that when he stood on French soil there wasn't an atom of selfishness or self-pity in him. It wasn't a question of adventure; it wasn't a question of drowning his sorrows; it was a question of his doing anything and everything he could to help out. Let me tell you something," Hilliard sat on the edge of his chair. "It's possible that you never thought of Dick Morgan either as a martyr or a fatalist. Nor do I think he was. But when he was brought to Neuilly there was among his papers a little sort of field diary—I'm sorry it was lost, so I haven't it to show to you, but I saw it often—and under the date of his first tour of duty in the front line trenches was scribbled this, quoted from Rousseau: 'The dead carry to the grave, in their clutched fingers, only that which they have given away.' Doctor Durant, Dick went into this war in the belief that the only way to reclaim his life was to sacrifice it. Does that answer your question?"

There was an utter stillness. It had been a superb fiction, but Hilliard demically—if you didn't go so far beyond the actual facts?"

"How do you mean?"

"Why," said Hilliard, "for one thing, in laying so much stress on his grandparents, Dick was the one who went overseas; his grandparents didn't! And his grandparents didn't go into action on the western front sizzling Stevenson's 'Requiem' at the top of their lungs and knowing that it was mighty appropriate, as Dick did!"

"What?" said Carol, straightening.

"What's that?"

"No," the doctor's negative was quiet, but decisive. "A man doesn't rise to heights of glory without some reason for it, Mr. Hilliard. But a man can resist his inheritance for a good many years, and suddenly stop resisting and revert to his family type. He can do it voluntarily or involuntarily. It's what we call atavism." He paused and smiled sadly. "The pity of it," he said, "is that in spite of his having failed in everything he tried to do in Syracuse, he would have made us proud of him, sooner or later, if he had stayed on here. I'm positive of that."

"Pity!" Hilliard straightened. This was the third time in two days that he had caught the intimation that he could have come home decently and humbly and been forgiven.

"Not that I pity him for what he accomplished, or what it cost him," warned the doctor. "I don't; I was very fond of the boy, Mr. Hilliard, but I wouldn't for the world have had him do anything else than what he did. No—but I do pity him because he can never know what we think; because he can never know how much we gladly forget; because he can never know why we are proud of him."

Hilliard's pupils were distended.

hear to see a woman cry; it was immaterial to him who she was, or what the circumstance; he was powerfully affected—distracted. His single aim was to console her—it was a selfish aim designed primarily to relieve himself.

"But it's easy to see," he said desperately. "Why he was so anxious to have me come. I . . . I have twice as many reasons to envy him now, Miss Durant. . . . I really have. And . . . and, unlike your father, I can pity him, too, for—"

"Oh!" she said, smiling tremulously at him through the misty veil of her tears. "But you see, Mr. Hilliard . . . you're quite mistaken . . . I . . . I wasn't pitying Dicky; I was pitying me!"

He bit his lip sharply. No reproach could have gone deeper.

"That was your letter, you said?"

"Oh, yes," she said. "It couldn't have been for anyone else! Thank you so much . . . for bringing it . . ."

He was trying to analyze the emotions which stirred him. He had told himself over and over again that his love for her was numb; and yet here he was . . . unsteadily balanced . . . tormented by her grief . . . and lying to her in the next sentence—to protect his previous lies, and to give to her what comfort he could.

"I want you to have his war cross, Miss Durant. . . . I think it belongs to you more than to anyone else. I . . ."

He stopped and stood irresolute; for she had broken down completely. He watched her and slowly the blood burned in his cheeks! He tried to order his thoughts, to select his action . . . if he still loved her, he was there to console her; if not . . . he ought in all humanity to console her just the same, even if it took another of those inexcusable deceptions. For an instant he was on the point of succumbing to a wild impulse to blurt out the truth and take the consequences . . .

He started; for she had motioned to him—motioned him away. He hesitated . . . was it love, or repentance, or only his disquiet to see a woman cry? She motioned again, hysterical . . .

Hilliard's brain snapped; Syracuse had sung his praise too late. The doctor with his isms and dissections was too late—Carol herself was too late with tears. His jaws came together; he glanced at her once more and then, in obedience to her gesture, he turned and tiptoed quietly from the room. The front door closed quietly behind him. The danger of succumbing was over and, he believed, permanently, and yet . . .

"Even Stephen!" he whispered as he went down the steps.

CHAPTER VI.

Ordinarily Mr. Cullen was satisfied to bring a single evening paper home with him and when he laid it on the hall table it was generally creased down the financial page; but tonight he brought two, and each of them had wrinkles across the market reports and were folded so as to feature the departments devoted to local news. The Journal had beaten the Herald by two sticks and a subhead, but the Herald had honored Dicky Morgan with a kindly editorial and both papers had stated explicitly where Hilliard was making his headquarters. Mr. Cullen would have been seriously offended if he hadn't been mentioned at least once in each paper; and this is no more a reflection upon his vanity than the fact that he cherished a lively anticipation for what the Post-Standard was going to say about the case tomorrow morning.

Nevertheless, there was a fly in the ointment—not very much of a fly, to be sure, but still appreciable; and after all, it isn't the size of the invader that counts. Mr. Cullen was generous; Mr. Cullen was hospitable; but Mr. Cullen was also the tiniest bit of a snob—not a carping, contemptuous, supercilious snob, but a healthy, hearty, open-spirited snob, frank in his liking for the things he liked—and one of them was to be somebody, and have the neighbors know it. He liked to fraternize with important men; he liked to see his name in the paper now and then; he liked to feel superior—just one harmless little degree—consequential—than his next-door neighbor. And the neighbor hadn't shared this conviction, wasn't any purpose in it.

And Mr. Cullen, with known weakness for promotion, known until the evening him so, hadn't even thought now he was to persuade himself that it all along, and other that he engineer of independent enough . . .

question as to the state of Hilliard's health, and before Angela had found an opportunity to get a word in edgewise.

"Understand you're a mining man, Mr. Hilliard," he said, pleasantly.

"I used to be," said Hilliard. "I've retired. I thought I told you so the first night I was here."

"Oh, yes—you did say something about it, but—" Mr. Cullen laughed with the fullness of one who has unearthed secrets. "It took some of our bright young newspaper crowd to ferret out the facts. You're too modest—that's what's the matter with you!"

As Hilliard smiled in deprecation Angela, crowing triumphantly, snatched for the papers.

"Where is it?" she cried. "Where . . . oh!" And relapsed into beatific calm, devouring the none too conservative paragraphs with all her might. The cold-typed repetition of the well-known story sobered her considerably; still, it was for Hilliard's and her father's names that she gloated; and as for the panegyric of Morgan, that was only an added garland to the wreath which was already his.

"Russian and English syndicate wasn't it?" asked Mr. Cullen.

"Yes," said Hilliard. "English and Russian."

a brace of fortnights. It was well, however, to be prepared; and the time to plant the seed of desire is when the prospect is willing.

"Mighty interesting game—mining," said Cullen. "Let's wander down by the fountain; shall we? . . . I don't know why it is, but it sort of fascinates me—guess it does everybody. More romance in it than most lines." Here Angela looked up sharply, and gurgled with wicked satisfaction, and sent a lifted eyebrow signal across to Hilliard.

"Yes," said Hilliard, "but there's more tragedy, too. I suppose that's the law of compensation getting to work. Big profits call for big risks."

This was for sand in Cullen's eyes; and it had its effect.

"Oh, but the ratio's the same in almost any business, Mr. Hilliard, isn't it? It's about the same theory. Savings banks pay three to four per cent, but they never made a man rich yet. But copper has!"

The fascination of a mine for a man.

AFTER 6 YEARS—STILL WELL

Now Strong and Hearty Though Case Looked Hopeless

"Six years ago I was in awful condition," says E. K. Chase, 36 E. Cross St., Ypsilanti, Mich. "My family was told I couldn't live more than two months. I was in constant pain from the uric acid and was so bad with rheumatism, my legs seemed all drawn up. My back never stopped hurting. The kidney secretions were held back until only a few drops came, and I blotted until I thought my skin would burst. My legs were twice their normal size. The water seemed to fill my chest and press against the heart. For three months I never moved out of the chair and I choked and gasped for breath like a dying man. All the doctors failed, and my weight went from 185 to 125 pounds. Doan's Kidney Pills saved my life. Eleven boxes cured me of every complaint. I have been well six years and able to work as hard as any man."

HEDLEY'S GREAT SHOWING IN BASKET BALL CONTEST

The Hedley Basket Ball Boys endured one of the most grilling trials in their race for the honors of High School basket ball that has ever been witnessed in the Panhandle.

There were ten boys teams represented at Canyon and they were eliminated as follows:

Preliminaries

Love lost to Higgins
Quitague lost to Tulla
Dalhart lost to Amarillo
Whitdeer forfeited to Farwell
Ochiltree lost to Hedley.

Semi Finals

Amarillo lost to Farwell
Tulla lost to Hedley
Higgins lost to Farwell.

Finals

Hedley 31, Farwell 35.

One of the remarkable things about the Hedley showing was the first two games were 81 to 12 each, and the last game was 31 to 35—but that was the great game and the real game that decided the championship.

During the meet the Hedley team was a decided favorite, and with their light weight (average under 130 pounds) they lost to one of the heaviest (average between 155 and 160) and best teams that has ever been in the Panhandle. Our team has gone thru the year without having a squabble with an opposing team, and have won the approval of all opponents for their fairness and clean playing.

In behalf of the boys, I want to thank the men of Hedley for their financial support during the year, and especially the expense money on their trip. The gratification of the boys cannot be expressed at the great attendance of their fathers and friends at the final game.
