THE "SISSY" AND SCOUTING

Much adverse publicity in moving picture shows, and elsewhere, as well as the ideas formulated in the minds of some of the older boys to the effect that the Boy Scout movement tends to make "sissies" out of boys, has been dispelled by the accomplishments of numerous scouts in late years.

For instance, the 1932 All American football team as picked by the Associated Press, the United Press, and five of the greatest coaches in the United States, was composed TOTALLY of boys who had been boy scouts. Moss of Purdue, was a first class scout; Zimmerman, Tulane, first class scout; Hitchcock, Auburn, second class scout; Corbus, Stanford, star scout; Gracey, Vanderbilt, first class scout; Smith, Colgate, second class scout; King, Army, scout for one year; Brown, So. California, life scout; Christensen, Utah, second class scout; Smith, So., California, first class scout; Newman, Michigan, first class scout.

ARE THESE HARD TIMES?

People who think they are having one heck of a time in this country might be slightly enlightened by reading an account in an exchange of a man who just returned from several years' sojourn in Europe where he had been engaged in business. This man left New Mexico eleven years ago, expecting to make merely a visit to his native land, Jugoslavia, and then return to America. Instead he became interested in a business venture and stayed this length of time, part of it caused by the fact that he could not get released from his own country under the immigration laws—was not free to return.

This man is reported to have stated that conditions in Europe are much worse than here. For example, the prevailing wage rate is 15 cents per day, and prices of commodities are by no means in proportion to the wages paid. A man must work ten days, he said, for enough to buy himself a pair of cheap shoes. He states that laborers could buy but one meal at a restaurant for a day's wage. Miners, however, were better paid receiving the magnificent sum of 25 cents per day. He added that half the people of that country would come to America if they could, but that they are far too poor to make the move.—Magdalena News.

GOT MARRIAGE LICENSE ON INSTALLMENT PLAN

DICKENS, Texas—A wife in hand is worth twice as much as one in prospect!

A McAdoo, Texas man apparently thought so when he filed an intention-to-wed application at the county clerk's office. Upon completing the formality the clerk told him that the fee was $2 cash on the barrel head—or no license. But the applicant requested a temporary moratorium.

"You see," he told the clerk, "we have never seen each other. I have written for my wife-to-be and she is due to arrive from Arkansas in a few days. I'd rather not pay for the license until I am sure we are to get married." The situation was compromised on the basis of a dollar down and as much more payable when the license was delivered. A few days later the prospective bridegroom paid the last installment and got married.

FEDERAL GRAND JURY DISMISSED

The federal grand jury, in session at Santa Fe last week, ended its deliberations Monday and reported Monday noon to U. S. District Judge Neblett, and was discharged with the thanks of the court.

The jury brought in 161 true bills and 75 no true bills; examined 272 witnesses, considered 225 matters or cases, involving 318 defendants.

Small matters, under instructions of the court, were disregarded. One case was not considered, because it was dismissed by order of the court. Another was not considered because the witnesses were unable to attend, by reason of deep snows in Rio Arriba county.

Odd—but TRUE

ROOSEVELT NAMES TWO IN CABINET

NEW YORK—Two tried and successful veterans in the fields of politics and business were announced Tuesday night by President-elect Roosevelt for his premier cabinet posts—Senator Hull of Tennessee, for secretary of state and William H. Woodin, of New York, for secretary of treasury.

The announcement came suddenly from the Roosevelt residence after the president-elect had spent a swift moving day in international affairs.

Impending developments in war debts and world economics impelled Mr. Roosevelt to make his announcement of these two councilors. They will go to work immediately with foreign envoys on the Roosevelt program to bring a revival of world trade and prosperity.

BOMB FOR ROOSEVELT

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The Washington Post says in a copy-righted story that a second apparent attempt on the life of President-elect Roosevelt was revealed Tuesday night with the discovery of a bomb addressed to him amid incoming mail at the city postoffice.

Addressed to "Franklin D. Roosevelt, Washington, D. C.," the explosive was discovered by postoffice clerks when it tumbled from a mail sack and the box in which it was contained burst open.

William Satterfield, chief postal inspector for the Washington area said he had launched an extensive investigation to trace the sender. The package was postmarked in Watertown, New York.

ENGRAVING at The Messenger

Gene White helped take up the offering for the Baptist church services Sunday morning. He marched up to the altar where the preacher was waiting to give the invocation, then looked in the hat, and turned around with a look of disgust at the audience. "I just got thirty cents," he said.

My oldest daughter saw me coming home the other night and called to her mother: "Mother, here comes daddy." Mrs. Dye said, "No, darling, you must be mistaken. You should say, There goes daddy." Now that just goes to show how inconsiderate a woman is. I just naturally have to come home as often as I leave, or I can't ever leave. Now, doesn't that make sense? But who in heck could reason with a woman anyway? I had an awful time ever getting her to marry me in the first place. She didn't drink, so I couldn't get her drunk, and I finally had to hit her over the head with a hammer and marry her before she woke up.

STATE GETS FIRST CHECK FOR POTASH ROYALTIES

New Mexico Tuesday received the first royalty check on potash, State Land Commissioner Frank Vesley said. It amounts to $309.85 and is from the United States Potash Co., for the last three months of 1932. The royalty is 5 per cent.

Strange Trick of Mind That Has Puzzled Many

The condition that causes a person to feel that he has had exactly the same experience before when he knows that it is not possible is known as paramnesia. It is a common experience, and, briefly explained, the reaction depends upon a little trick of the mind manifested by a momentary loss of a sense of time and space. The individual enters an experience or a situation, obtains a fleeting impression of this situation, then the attention is momentarily attracted to something else. The period of time may be almost infinitesimal. Then upon the return of the attention to the original situation this lapse of time is lost to the individual and the period between the two experiences seems occasionally to expand into a long period, even into the remote past. Another explanation, which is based on more recent psychological investigations, holds that one's unconscious mind sees much more than the attentive conscious one, and that a situation, even to its details, may be taken in without paying direct conscious attention to it. Then a moment later when the faculties of the conscious mind are at work on the situation the experience seems to have been experienced before. Here, again, the lapse of time between the two impressions may be greatly overestimated and expanded.—Washington Star.

Funeral Made Occasion for Joyous Ceremonies

Veronica Kantor, a wealthy old peasant woman of Temerin, in the Backa, had her "wedding" celebrated by scores of guests who attended her funeral, says the New York Times. As a young girl she vowed never to marry and kept it to the day of her death at the age of eighty-two years. In her will she ordered that she should not be buried with funeral services but with marriage rites.

Her Instructions were carried out according to Serbian wedding customs. Her body was arrayed in a wedding dress and a crown of myrtle leaves. Horses decked out with white and silver ribbons drew the gayly decorated hearse to the cemetery, followed by scores of peasants in their rainbow-colored festival garments singing gay wedding songs of love and romance. All carried multicolored bouquets.

After the burial the guests returned to the dead "bride's" former home, where music, dancing and feasting were kept up until a late hour.

Important Science

Demography is the science which deals with the statistics of health and disease, of the physical, intellectual, physiological and economical aspects of births, marriages and mortality. The first to employ the word was Achille Guillard (1855), but the meaning which he attached to it was merely that of the science which treats of the condition, general movement and progress of population in civilized countries, i. e., little more than vital statistics. The word has come to have a much wider meaning and may now be defined as that branch of statistics which deals with the life conditions of peoples.

RUBBER

The first record of India rubber was made in accounts of Columbus' second voyage to America, where he found the natives of Haiti amusing themselves with rubber balls. In a book published in Madrid in 1615, Juan de Lorquennado mentions the tree which yields rubber in Mexico, describes the mode of collecting the gum and states that it is made into shoes; also that the Spaniards used it for waxing their canvas cloaks to make them resist water. It was first studied scientifically by the French Geologist L. A. Condamine while in Ecuador, and samples of the product with a note were presented to the French Academy in 1736. First known as elastic gum, the name of India rubber suggested by Priestley, the chemist, about 1770 from its use for rubbing out pencil marks. It is stated that the first rubber was brought to the U. S. in 1800, the very year in which Charles Goodyear was born, whose inventions made possible the modern rubber industry.

Five years ago a series of experiments was carried out in England on normal young men who were made to exercise after test meals. The conclusion derived from these experiments was that mild exercise (walking) does not interfere with digestion but that more violent exercise (running) does delay digestion.

The most recent investigators have carried out their experiments in the University of Wisconsin. Their results, published last October in the American Journal of Physiology, again confirm the judgment of Thomas Cogan given in the sixteenth century. Mild exercise before or after meals may actually be beneficial, severe exercise either before or after meals is bad for digestion.

Certainly the Wisconsin scientists write in a language that would have been mysterious indeed to the doctor or to the students of sixteenth century Oxford. But what care they (or we) about the hydrogen ion concentration of the blood plasma? They believed it unwise to play football just after lunch and it seems that they were right.

WIFE OF APACHE KID DIES AT MESCALERO

MESCALERO.—Mrs. Jacinto Ramirez, the woman who was the stolen bride of Zenogalache, "The Apache Kid" red terror of the southwest is dead.

Although the captive wife of an Indian outlaw she led as sheltered and protected a life as any modern housewife and died at her home at Mescalero.

Kept in chains for two years after her capture, the woman came to love "The Kid," was released from bondage, lived in this mountain lair for 12 years and bore five children.

One sunny fall day about 1892 Zenogalache swooped down upon Mrs. Ramirez, then a girl and her mother as they were picking pinon nuts near the Crosby camp, above Three Rivers, now the ranch of A. B. Fall, former secretary of the interior.

Spurring his horse, the kid captured the girl and rode away with her into the mountains. Nothing more was heard from her and her family mourned her for dead.

During the next 12 years the Kid spread terror from Duncan, Ariz., to the San Andreas mountains and from Magdalena into Mexico.

About 1905 stockmen of the Magdalena country determined to halt his depredations. Two cowboys traced him to his mountain hideout, laid for him near his hobbled horse and at daylight shot and killed him as he came for the animal. He was buried where he fell.

Mrs. Ramirez later revealed that the Kid had a premonition the day before he was killed that his career was about to be ended by a bullet. He took her to the top of a high hill, pointed the way to Mescalero and told her if anything happened to him she was to return to her people.

After the Kid was killed Mrs. Ramirez took her five children and went to San Marcial, finally making her way back to her former home.

The Kid was well known in the Mescalero region before he turned outlaw. His mother was killed in a battle with cowboys. Two of the cowboys, W. A. Paxton of Elk and W. H. Mauldin of La Luz, saw a squalling pupoose on the back of the dead woman, and rescued him. They intended to trade the Indian child for a white one that had been captured a short time before but the exchange did not materialize. As the Indian grew older he was sent to an eastern school and learned to speak English fluently. He ran away from school and when next heard from was with a band of marauding Indians of the southwest—the Apache Kid.

He was accused of many things A railroad brakeman was shot from the top of a train. After the kid's death the brakeman's switch key was found tied about his neck. A miner was killed and part of his personal effects were found in possession of the Kid.

Mrs. Ramirez remembered him as a dashing, swashbuckling outlaw who was always kind to her and a good father.

DAIRY RECORDS FOR FOUR N. M. COUNTIES

The first six months of the present year's dairy records on 75 herds in Roosevelt, Quay, Harding and Union counties show some interesting results on herd management, says E. E. Anderson of the New Mexico state College.

While six months is not a sufficient period from which to draw definite conclusions, it does indicate what the trend is. In this brief study feed fed, (pasture not included) was the only cost taken into consideration.

The ten highest producing herds had a production of almost three times as much butterfat per cow, a feed cost per cow nearly six times as great, and an income over feed per cow five times as much as did the ten lowest producing herds.

As an average, this study showed that the greater the production, the greater the income over feed cost. It also showed that on the average the more the cows were fed, the greater was the income over the cost of feed. However, in studying individual cases, it was found that some herds had apparently been fed beyond the point where the cows were capable of responding, thus greatly reducing their income. On the other hand, the study indicated that some herds would doubtless have made a greater income over feed cost had they been fed more liberally.

Those who provided cultivated pastures (sudan, rye, wheat, etc.) for their herds were awarded by an income over feed costs per cow of over one and a half times as much as did those who relied on native grass pastures.

This study indicates that there is little enough profit even under the best of conditions. In general, however, those who made the better returns were those who had good cows, fed them fairly liberally and, in addition, provided cultivated pastures.

DIGESTION AND EXERCISE

Here is a question that has troubled the medical mind at least from the time of Hippocrates and probably long before that: Is it wise to exercise before or after a meal?

The most precious item in my library is a book published "about 1589" entitled "The Haven of Health." I believe it is the first college text book of personal hygiene to be printed in English. In it the author, Thomas Cogan, writes as follows:

"Wherefore I counsele all studentes not to exercise immediately after meate, for by that means the meate is conveyed into all the members before it bee concocted or boyled sufficiently. Yet to rise up after meate, and to stand upright for a while, or

Five years ago a series of experiments was carried out in England on normal young men who were made to exercise after test meals. The conclusion derived from these experiments was that mild exercise (walking) does not interfere with digestion but that more violent exercise (running) does delay digestion.

The most recent investigators have carried out their experiments in the University of Wisconsin. Their results, published last October in the American Journal of Physiology, again confirm the judgment of Thomas Cogan given in the sixteenth century. Mild exercise before or after meals may actually be beneficial, severe exercise either before or after meals is bad for digestion.

Certainly the Wisconsin scientists write in a language that would have been mysterious indeed to the doctor or to the students of sixteenth century Oxford. But what care they (or we) about the hydrogen ion concentration of the blood plasma? They believed it unwise to play football just after lunch and it seems that they were right.

The Missing Heiress
By ISABELLE WAITT

JUDY was furious at herself for blushing; furious at the man beside her for catching her looking up at him. Yet she could not help it. Ever since that first, "Pardon me, is this seat engaged?" she felt his hypnotic gaze upon her. He, too, she saw from his ticket, was going to New York city. His luggage was high grade. Gold initials—were they J. S.—adorned a black walrus case.

As the train stopped, Judy reached the aisle first. Two strangers accosted her at the foot of the steps. "Miss Herrick? We'd like a word with you." They took hold of her arms. Startled, the girl jerked to free herself, but the men held on. "Who are you?" she demanded. "Let go my arms. You've got a nerve!"

"Well, I never! I'm not this person you're looking for and I can prove it. Hey, George!" She had caught sight of the man who'd occupied the train seat with her. He was coming down the steps, carrying two large suitcases. "These men," she confronted him, "think I'm somebody named Angela Herrick. You can vouch for me. For goodness sake tell them I'm Judy Smith. There—my initials are on that overnight case he's carrying for me," she pointed out to the detectives. "You can see for yourselves."

"You can see for yourselves," acquiesced "George" gallantly. "I can speak for this young lady." Puzzled, but reassured, the men breathed hasty apologies. This girl, they said, just fitted the description of an heiress, missing now several days, who had been reported en route from Boston to New York. "Thank you—George," Judy smiled, when they were alone.

"You're welcome, Judy. Do you believe in wish fulfillment?" "That's something to do with dreams, isn't it?" "Um-hm, so I've heard. Anyway, I was dreaming on the train I had met you and now I have." "Well, you'd better wake up and help me get out of here before those private detectives come back. See them over by the gate? I'll wager they're still watching me."

He looked at her queerly. She was, then, the missing heiress. He'd read something about it in the paper. "Suppose I stick around a bit, Miss—Miss Smith. We seem to have lots of things in common—initials and glances, for instance. How about a common lunch?" "I think you're being horrid, but I'm starved and I would like to give those dumb sleuths the slip."

Death Valley Love

By MARSHALL BREEDON

BULL GRAHAM had lived for fifty years in the Mojave desert spending most of his time tramping around Death valley.

"It's a-gettin' so a man can hardly have room fer to turn around in," Bull grumbled.

Lonesome June, his long-eared Jenny, who was asleep on her feet beside him, did not wake up at the sound of Bull's voice. But when the crunch of feet cut the still hot air Lonesome June opened one eye, looked at the newcomer and went to sleep again.

Bull had caught a view of the young girl's face. She was making hard headway through the alkali.

She stopped when she came up to the old man. Her lips were cracking, her breath came in quick gasps, but under the blister of her face the countenance was determined. Bull was about to say something when the girl stepped aside and started to pass.

Instantly Bull slid forward. His heat-twisted old body barred her passage.

"You can't fight the sink," he said. "You're walking to yur death, sure."

She glared at him. Eye, wide, lips set, muscles taut. "I know what I am doing." The tone was harsh, the words stammered through the dry throat. "Let me go." She jerked away, but before she could step forward Bull took her by both arms and swung her face away from the deadly blow of the sun.

He held her until the brief struggle died. When he loosened her she looked at him. "Old Buzzard. You mind your own business, I want to die."

For a brief moment their eyes held, then the girl wavered, her breast heaved and, sitting in the hot alkali, she buried her face in her arms and sobbed, dreadfully.

Bull Graham stepped to the side of Lonesome June. He took a water bottle from his pack and stood about the girl.

"A drink of water slow like," he held it close, temptingly so, "then you'll not want to die. No man in the world is worth what you was a doing. Take a drink outen the bottle."

"I love him." Her words were more broken than before.

The old man drew her to her feet, led her toward the patient Jenny.

"Best we get back to the hotel," he said. "It's not farren a couple of miles. They started off slow. The water had revived the girl. Her eyes lost some of their fierceness, her lips softened. They walked without speaking. Every hundred steps or so Bull would offer her a drink. On the fourth stop she handed the bottle back. "I'm not going back." Her voice was firm.

"If you go into the sink, I'll have to be a-goin' with you and me and Lonesome June is tired, we be."

"He was going to marry me," she said. "He had a change of heart again, you?" "In the hotel he told me while we were dancing that he did not want to marry me."
