SEVEN TEACHERS IN INDIAN SCHOOLS SUSPENDED

Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, has ordered the suspension of seven teachers of Indian children in the southwest section, pending a searching investigation into charges that these teachers have resorted to medieval forms of discipline.

Corporal punishment in Indian schools was forbidden by regulation four years ago. That regulation has been reinforced by explanation and otherwise at superintendents' conferences for the last three years, according to a report to Secretary Ickes by Mr. John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The report includes instances of beatings by teachers, compulsions to kneel for many hours on concrete floors and other forms of humiliating punishment of boys and girls. Such methods of discipline "will not be tolerated," Mr. Ickes said. Commenting on the report, Mr. Collier stated that it is the purpose of the Commission of Indian Affairs "to run the Indian Service schools according to the most enlightened and modern methods of education."

OFFICE OF EDUCATION ENLARGES ITS JOURNAL

Mr. William D. Boutwell, editor-in-chief of School Life, a monthly journal published by the Office of Education, Department of the Interior, states that four pages will be added to the journal.

The consolidation of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the Office of Education now makes School Life the official organ for the principal federal activities in the interest of education.

Mr. Boutwell stated that the enlarged journal will present the following features during the coming year: federal emergency education activities, including reports of progressive practices in the CCC camps, and bulletins to camp educational advisers; useful references and data for high school debaters on the subject of "Federal Aid to Education," for 1934-35; a series of articles based on reports to the Office of Education from other countries; notes and news items on "vocational education in agriculture, trade and industry, home economics, commercial subjects and rehabilitation;" schools news, based on reports from state and city school systems, reported to the Office of Education.

Because of the increased number of pages of the journal and printing costs, the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, has announced a new price for School Life, 10 cents per copy, $1 per year for 10 issues.

LOCAL HUNTERS HAVE ALL DIFFERENT STORIES

When Johnny Bowen was asked who went hunting with him, answered, "Nearly everybody in town." So here is his list: Levi Barnett (who does not live in town), Bernice Barnett, Elmer Bible, John Clarke, these five were successful in getting their deer. Others in the party were: O. J. Ford and C. H. Keeth. They hunted in the Oliver Lee pasture.

In the party with Jim Michelet were Frankie Davis, Frank McCarthy and Louis Heick, the first three were successful, but Mr. Heick had bad luck, his deer had previously been wounded. They hunted in the Shelton range.

"Bill" Richardson also had bad luck. When he shot his deer down, another fellow came up and claimed the deer, and Bill could never get another one. He hunted around the Capitan mountains.

Pete Losey said, "Well, I had a grand time." He was near Wagon Mound.

Lloyd Harshey brought home the meat alright, but he must be afraid we'll ask for some, for he has never given a report. When he left home, he was headed for the Black Range, near the Arizona line. That is all we know.

Why the Sudden Change to Liquid Laxatives?

Doctors have always recognized the value of the laxative whose dose can be measured, and whose action can be thus regulated to suit individual need.

The public, too, is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that a properly prepared liquid laxative brings a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The wrong cathartic may often do more harm than good. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription, and is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna—a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is obtainable at all druggists.

Cows Show Amazing Good Sense If They Don't Move From Cars

(Lawrence Cordwell in The Los Angeles Times)

"As dumb as a cow!" When you find yourself on the receiving end of such a simile, murmur "Thank you"—and go on about your business, smiling. I have known thousands of cow-critters superficially, and hundreds of them intimately. They are exasperating, and misunderstood for the most part, but not dumb. I have in mind the old-time range cows rather than the more modern critter that is fed and sheltered.

In the days of the open range grazing was scattered and range was sometimes miles from the nearest grass. The country was infested with coyotes, wolves and panthers, all of them continually on the prowl for a feast of fresh meat. It was easier for a cow to die than to live. Yet the old range cows not only lived, but they increased under these conditions.

Mother cows had a deep sensibility regarding their maternal obligations. They never left their calves alone when they grazed or watered. It was not an uncommon sight to ride over a hill and find six or seven young calves lying in the shade of mesquite bushes and only one cow in sight, either grazing close by or just chewing her cud. The next day at about the same place you would find the same calves, but another cow standing by. Clubbing together in this way, the mothers were able to graze and trek several miles after water without leaving their calves, young and weak, to an untimely fate. On occasion the guarding mother had other things to do besides chew her cud.

Early one morning several miles from headquarters I heard the tipping of coyotes and rode to the top of a little rise to see what all the excitement was about. Four little calves were huddled together out in an open space, and five coyotes were loping around them, yapping at the cow, circling with her back to the calves, and shaking lowered horns at the coyotes.

I slipped my Winchester out of the scabbard but waited to see what was happening. One coyote made a run at the cow, snapping and dogging just in front of her slashing horns. She charged only a few feet from the calves and then backed up to them again. Another coyote darted in from the other side, and the cow rushed him back over the "dead line." While she was busy with one coyote the others would sneak in behind her and try to hamstring one of the terrified calves.

More than likely the coyotes would have gotten a calf in the end because the old cow was tiring. No telling how long this had been going on. The coyotes and the cow alike were so intent on the business at hand that I hadn't been noticed until I cut loose and let a lot of daylight through one of the coyotes and unhooked several more 30-30s away through the brush.

During branding season sometimes 2,000 cows and calves are rounded up and milled around for a day or two while the branding is being done. Naturally cows and their calves become separated and lost from each other. But as soon as they are set at liberty, both the cows and the calves high-tail it back to the spot where they saw each other last. Maybe this is instinct, but it looks like sense to me.

They also know how to protect their pasturage. Sheep or goats will graze a pasture clean, but not so with cows. They will eat the leaves of certain bushes and eat weeds and grass, but they never eat anything down to where it is killed. They protect their grazing further by eating only certain kinds of vegetation at certain seasons of the year, and I have noticed that this is the season when that particular vegetation furnishes the most nourishment and grazing does the least harm to the plant.

In grazing steep, hilly country, cows lay it out in trails that would do credit to an engineer. Grazing trails very seldom have more than a 6 per cent grade, and are laid out so there isn't a sprig of grass on the whole hillside that can't be reached from a trail.

In the days of the open range the cows grazed their territory in cycles. In the spring they would be back away from permanent water, drinking out of pools and puddles of surface water, saving the grass near the year-around water till later in the season when the surface water was used up.

In addition to being adroit in practical things, cows are psychic. Yes, sir! Without the aid of crystal balls or other paraphernalia cows can foretell future events. You will see one cow absolutely foolish about her calf and another one take no particular interest in hers. Nine times out of ten, the calf that receives all the attention is sold as a veal or dies! I have watched the same cow with several different calves. If the calf was going to make the grade all right, she'd feed him and that would be about all the attention he'd get. Then the next year I'd see the same cow licking and making over her calf all the time, never wanting it out of her sight. Before the summer was over the coyotes would get him or he'd turn up missing from one cause or another.

In the southwest a man was considered a newcomer or a certain kind of fool if he prophesied on the weather, but if he knew cows and would pay attention, he could foretell a storm and never miss. At a certain time every day or every other day, depending on how far she has to go, a cow will start for water, but if it's going to rain within twenty-four hours, she won't go to the creek if she has far to go. And when it's going to be a hard winter, a range cow doesn't spend much time in the shade during the summer; she's busy putting on some extra fat for the time when the ground will be covered with snow.

Likewise cow-critters can tell when they are coming to the end of their span. You can work the same herd all summer, branding calves and cutting out poor stuff, but in the fall when you gather the beef herd for shipment, then is when we shipped our beeves down to a better range. We rounded them up and loaded them on the cars without a bobble; almost willingly, they walked up the chute and into the cars. Sixty days later with the same herd ready for the market, they stampeded three times in two nights, and it took nearly a half day to

MRS. STELLA B. PALMER

Mrs. Stella Blaney Palmer was born in Bowen, Illinois, and her parents, Mary Elizabeth and John T. Blaney, christened her "Stella Rebekah," after her grandmother. The Blaney family included the father, the mother, one son and two daughters. Only the brother, who lives in Oklahoma, survives with Mrs. Palmer. The Blaneys lived in Bowen until her father's business interests caused him to move his family to Quincy, Illinois, only a short way from Bowen. Her school life began in Quincy and continued until she was graduated from Franklin high school in the same town.

A year later she attended a Kansas teacher's institute and received a certificate to teach school. When asked if she specialized or majored in any one subject, she answered: "Why I took everything, there were only five of us that did that; we took a full Latin course, and a full English course." She had no idea of teaching school when she graduated, and for three months afterwards she visited in the home of her grandfather in Rock Island, Illinois. It was here that she first met her cousin, Sara Rebekah Garnett (Mrs. Sarah Walton).

However, the teaching profession had a promising future, and so she began and taught two years, and then married John N. Palmer. Two children, Garnett get them in the loading pens. They had to be shoved into the cars by main strength.

As old age overtakes some cows they get tired of living and just lie down to die—no doubt reasoning that life isn't worth the effort it takes. These fits of despondency invariably occur in winter when range life is at its toughest. When a cow decides to die, nothing can stop her. After you have worried and strained "tailing" her up, she'll turn around and make a run at you, then fall down again as much as to say, "Go on away and let me die in peace." I have even had them, when down, refuse hay that I'd packed to them on horseback.

I have found other younger cows, in worse shape physically, that seemed to appreciate it when you got down and helped them get on their feet so they could pick a little something to eat and carry on. A cow heavy with calf is usually willing to do almost anything to survive, but an old cow that is barren seems to lose heart and want to die.

If you still think cows are dumb, just go out and live with them for a few years, as I have, and see how many things they know that you hadn't thought of yourself.

One summer the grass was poor and stampedes and trouble start. They realize, through some occult intuition, that they are headed for the slaughter house—the end.

and Walter, were born of this union, both dying in infancy. Later, on account of Mr. Palmer's failing health, she moved from Kansas to California. After his death, she taught there and began getting college credits for subjects taken at the Los Angeles Normal School. Altogether she lived in California twelve years, moving from there to her father's homestead, Blaney Ranch, near Estancia, New Mexico. The homestead was later deeded to her, before her father's death. After moving to New Mexico she added to her credits at intervals and was given an A. B. degree from the Las Vegas Normal University.

Since receiving her degree, she has attended summer school at Las Vegas, New Mexico, and San Diego, California. She has taught for fourteen years in the schools of Hagerman in the kindergarten and primary grade. After the first ten years of teaching, a few of the pupils who had begun under her, graduated each year, but the first official class as a whole of beginners under her was the class of 1933, and she was made an honorary member of that and the 1934 class, the second class of her beginners.

She spends some of her vacation trips in Hagerman, and her pleasure trips have included California, Old Mexico, Grand Canyon, Maryland, New York, Pennsylvania, Niagara Falls, and Canada, in speaking of her trip to Canada, she said, "To show how small the world may be after all, we met in Canada a lovely family who are living there; they were originally from Texas, and were, of course, interested in us because we were from New Mexico."

She is a very efficient mathematician, but her answer, when asked once why she taught in the lower grades—when she could command an enviable position in advanced work—speaks truly from the soul, "My love for little children makes me want to work with them, and thus doing, I am happy."

She has been a member of the Episcopal church since she was fourteen years old, and is keenly interested in Sunday school and church activities.

Have you ever considered how you spend your time? If you live to be 70 you will have been asleep 25 years. If you work the usual work-day week of eight hours you will have worked less than 15 years. That leaves about 30 years in which you have been neither asleep nor at work. Bathing and dressing alone will take up two years; eating three years.
