Japanese Imported Cotton Cloth Takes Duty of 14.2c per Pound

United State department of agriculture, says W. A. Wunsch, county

Of this amount 8.7 cents per at The Messenger. pound was the ad valorem duty on cotton cloth for January imports. The remainder, 5.5 cents per pound, was the compensatory tax which is levied to offset the processing tax paid by domestic manufacturers. The processing tax applies only to cotton used to make products sold in the United States and competing cotton products, imported from foreign countries, must pay the compensatory tax equivalent to the processing tax, in addition to the normal tariff duty imposed on imports of cotton cloth, it is pointed out by Cully A. Cobb, director of the agricultural adjustment administration's cotton division. Processing taxes on exports of cotton cloth are refunded.

An analysis of cotton cloth imports from Japan during January 1935 indicates that the following items were included in their cost before they could be put on United States markets:

Average invoice value at point of foreign departure, 31.7 cents per pound of cloth; average import duty, 8.7 cents per pound of cloth; compensating tax levied to offset processing tax, 5.5 cents per pound, which is equal to the rate of 4.2 cents per pound on raw cotten. To these costs must be added ocean shipping charges, insurance and handling charges.

And a moment later Hilda Frothingham was saying to Maggle, the housemaid, "Maggle, Miss Daphne and the baby have come for a little visit. Just go see that her room is in order. And put the baby and the nurse in the next room to hersno, put them in the other guest room across the hall, and see that the room next to Miss Daphne's is made up, too. Mr. Porter may be in later.

Jerry Porter was not especially fond of his mother-in-law. But he wasn't thinking of Hilda Frothingham at ten o'clock that distinguished fraternal brothers was making. He was thinking about Daphne. to summon him to the telephone. "Oh-Jerry!" It was his motherin-law's drawling voice, excited and almost incoherent, "Jerry-Daphne's out for the evening-I can't get her. And little Daphne. I'm so upset. Then there was something about croup, strangling, convulsions.

Forty minutes later Jerry dashed from a taxicab at his mother-inlaw's Long Island suburban home. Maggle admitted him a moment

"How's-" he began, then hesitated, afraid of the fear that suddenly came over him "Jerry-" it was Hilda Frothingham's voice, and she led him quickly

"The baby's all right." Then she was gone, and Daphne was in his arms. 'Oh, darling," she was sobbing, "the baby's all right.

But when mother telephoned-"She said she couldn't get you," exclaimed Jerry.

Daphne clung to him. "She told me she couldn't find you-that the baby was ill. And I rushed home. The baby's all right. She let Clara go out and I suppose the baby choked, and it frightened her. But Jerry, it's you I want. I meanoh, Jerry, you're more to me even than the baby!"

Jerry kissed the bent, repentant head on his shoulder. "Daphne," he said, "I think perhaps Hilda Frothingham is a pretty swell girl. I us together."

"Daphne," called a drawling rather querulous voice from the hall, "I'm going to bed. Maggie's fixed a tray down in the living room. Good
