The opening ceremony was the only one unanimously attended. From that time on, too many things were happening to engage the entire juvenile attention at one time. There was the sunrise salute of 21 guns, engineered by the village blacksmith who placed one great anvil upon another with giant powder in between, touched off from a daring proximity with a red hot iron. Usually the nether anvil grew very hot before the 21 salutes were fired and this was one of the causes of many distressing accidents in the insane era.

Hostilities usually were suspended at noon for the community dinner in the city park, where fried chicken, watermelon and lemonade from a barrel engaged the general attention until satiety was reached. U. S. Revokes Sanctions Imposed on Italy

FOLLOWING the lead of Great Britain, the United States formally revoked all sanctions imposed against Italy during the recent Italo-Ethiopian conflict. A proclamation by President Roosevelt declared all previous communications dealing with the sale of munitions of war, loans and travel by Americans on Italian ships was revoked.

Although the sanctions were

The French cabinet agreed to abide by any action which the League of Nations may take in cancelling sanctions against Italy.

The British government's decision to abandon sanctions was defended in an address by Prime Minister Baldwin as the only alternative which would prevent a suicidal war plunging western civilization into "barbarous anarchy."

Baldwin asserted: "We think it is right to drop sanctions because they are useless and ineffective.

"There is only one way to alter the course of events as they have thus far taken place. That is by going to war.

"I do not know a single nation in Europe that is prepared for that. I would not cast my vote for that course of action."

THE VALUE OF YOUTH

We are mindful of the fact that in our own little community, and we judge others to be similaryouth so often are not permitted an opportunity of showing their talents.

In a review of well known people, we are cognizant that their youthful minds were embryonic talent, eventually developing into Marco Polo, the world's great adventurer even in youth, became famous at the court of Peking. Tennyson, minstrel of the Victorianage, had at 18 published a book of poetry. Socrates, the world's philosopher, began in youth to "seek truth." Woodrow Wilson, the statesman, had published a remarkable article on the subject of responsible government the year before he graduated. He was 22 years old. Benjamin Franklin at 23 years was publishing the Pennsylvania Gazette. It survives today as the Saturday Evening Post. Santa Fe, N. M., June 12, 1936. Thomas A. Will they lose? No, for by their act, they will inspire more confidence and loyalty. Man naturally likes to feel that he is being patriotic, and naturally admires it in others. It is patriotism toward a government that is doing its utmost to make a people inhabiting it more contented and happy. It is nothing but right, and those who stand by that conviction will not lose. Remember the saying, "Bread cast upon the waters, will return after many days." Thus we believe that patrons of these business men will appreciate and return loyalty.

FLAVOR VS. MATURITY

Mature vegetables, though they these of Roswell, New Mexico. may be large and solid, are often less desirable than smaller, younger 24-5t vegetables.

Root crops-carrot, radish, beet IN THE PROBATE COURT OF and so forth-are not only more tender and palatable, but also more nourishing when little more than half grown. Peas are best just before the pods fill out completely, and summer squash are tasty when small, just after the bloom has dropped off. It is just as true, however, that other vegetables should mature completely before being used. "Hands Up" By FLOYD GIBBONS Famous Headline Hunter

WELL, sir, you boys and girls seem to have had adventures . with about everything there is, but here's a bird with a new one. He is Morton Greenbaum of New York city, and he had an adventure with the English language.

Of course, that wasn't all of the adventure. There was a dark, sinister looking man in it-a man that frightened Mort almost to death. But the English language certainly played a big part, and to my mind it deserves most of the credit for the affair. Mort came to this country from Hungary in the fall of 1921, and made his home, at first, with a sister in Cleveland, Ohio. His sister conducted a grocery business there and she and Mort lived in rooms upstairs over the store. He stayed with his sister while he was learning English.

Mort worked hard over his English, for he realized that the sooner he had it learned, the sooner he could get a job and take his place in the community. Every evening he went to night classes at the Central High school, and in between times he brushed up on his class work by reading

Mort Believes Stick-up Guys Were Real Peril.

And from those papers, Mort got a mighty funny conception of what 'hese United States were like. The post-war crime wave was on, and the papers were full of stories about hold-ups. Mort didn't stop to think that those crime items were gathered from all over the country, and from all over the environs of Cleveland.

He thought of them in terms of the small towns in Hungary which he knew. And the result was that he began thinking of America as a place where law and order had broken down completely-where bandits ran wild all over town-something like our own conception of the banditry in China. He felt that, almost any minute, he might run across a stick-up man. And the thought wasn't very comforting.

Then, one day in October, it happened. Mort had been plugging on his English, and had learned a bunch of words that he recog- fashion. What! Glazed chintz going mized when he saw them on paper. But when people pronounced them, or when he tried to say them himself-well-that was a different matter. been serving as material for sofa Pronunciation was the thing that was bothering him most when, one day, cushions on summer verandas, as as he was watching the store while his sister had gone upstairs for a few bathroom curtains and as general minutes, a man came walking in.

This Looked Like an Honest-to-Goodness Hold-up. He came in silently, and that frightened Mort right at the start. He huge colored man and he stood in front of Mort with his right Hands up! Mort knew that word all too well. He had seen it in the newspapers too many times not to know what it meant. "Strangely enough," he says, "I didn't seem to be afraid to die. True, my legs gave way and I could hardly rise from the stool I was sitting on, but the prospect of my own death was not so disturbing as the thought that my only sister, a mother of five little children, might come down any minute.

"Accordingly, with all the self-control I could command, I began retreating along the counter toward the stairs so that if my sister appeared I might give her a sign to apprise her of the danger."

Black Man Has a Single-Track Mind.

At the same time, Mort felt that he ought to say something to keep that bird's mind off such ideas as shooting Mort. But the only thing HAT OF TULLE FOR he could think of was a feeble "Wh-a-at?" The big colored man seeme to be losing patience. "Hands'p!" he growled, this time louder and more insistently than before

"I had nearly reached the stairs," says Mort, "when the man seemed to lose his patience entirely. He brought his hand from his pocket-without a gun in it, to be sure-and gesticulating savagely in a certain direction above my head, bellowed from the depths of his lungs, 'Handsop!'"

And at that same moment, Mort heard his sister coming down the sailors made of layers of tulle, stairs. The thing he most fer.red had happened. His brain reeled and his marked by rounds of stitching and knees began giving way under him, but he pulled himself together and a loose frill formed by the layers whispered to his sister in Hurgarian: "Honey-man says "Handsop!" at the edge. Some of these stitched

This Hold-up Has an Extremely Happy Ending. But the dread warning didn't seem to make any impression on Mort's sister. She kept right on coming down those stairs. This time,

Mort lost all sense of caution. "Honey," he almost shouted. "Don't you bear? Handsop!" And Mort's sister looked at Mort as if to say, "Well, what are you yelling about?" What she did say, was: "All right. Give him one of those red cans on the second shelf."-Puzzled, bewildered, Mort turned in the direction she was pointing. "And on the sides of those little red cans," says Mort, "my allen eyes edge. One of the new evening hats spelled out the legend 'hand soap'! I had tripped up on nothing more dangerous than the niceties of pronunciation of the syllables 'up' and 'op, And the metallic sounding thing in the colored man's pocket was only the jingle of a few pennies with which he paid for his purchase."

well for two minutes, then add two teaspoonfuls each of vanilla and cinnamon, one teaspoonful each of salt and cloves, one cupful each of chopped candled pineapple, orange peel anl raisins, one-fourth cupful of citron, one-half cupful of almonds finely chopped and four cupfuls of flour with a teaspoonful of soda. Bake in two loaf cake pans for one and one-half hours.

Date Cake.

This is a moist, nice cake: Pour one cupful of boiling water over two-thirds of a cupful of dates and cook slowly one minute. Stir constantly. Beat one egg and add one cupful of sugar and one tablespoonful of melted butter, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful 'of nuts, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-fourth teaspoonful of nutmeg, two and one-third cupfuls of flour with one teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat both mixtures together two minutes. Pour into a loaf pan and bake forty minutes. Line the pan with waxed paper.

Stir buttered bread crumbs into a lemon filling and use for dessert. It takes the place of lemon pie and will satisfy those who cannot eat

The answer is I believe that it has already been done, Brides holding on to their jobs did not originate with the depression. The idea has been in practice long enough so that almost any suburb can show a crop of couples of the vintage of eight or ten years ago who started out with both working, and then when John made good settled down to the cottage and bables.

As little Tommy says, there's nothing for nothing in this life. And the situation of the working bride is not all to the good. But in many ways it is distinctly a gain in the foundation of lasting marriage. Chiefly, to my mind, is the fact that starting with that kind of teamwork gives a girl a healthy realistic viewpoint on what today's breadwinner is up against, and when her young husband becomes able to carry the load of a family, his modest success will not shrink to the contemptible in the eyes of a wife full of Illusions as to royal roads to riches and husbands who should come home from work all set to take their wives out for good time,
