"Write a good book sometime and put that in, Mr. Elten," said Rachel flippantly; but she thought: "That's so, I can see it for myself. If I hadn't gone to the Caynes' and seen and known my own mother, it would have ruined everything between Anne and me. But Curt went on his way and Rachel settled to her letters. It was the first time she had really been eager to write to Anne, the first time she had felt right toward her since she had been gone. But even now she could not tell her about being in the Cayne house: that story must be revealed only when it was over and she was back at Vinco's. Then she would tell the whole thing, the start, the middle and the end. There was no end to tell at present. Perhaps she would wait until Anne came home, written words were so hard to use, their sense off. changed between the hand of the writer and the eyes of the reader. Moreover, tonight she had no time to write a long letter, but she must tell Anne how dearly she loved her, how little she had appreciated her.

"Mother'll probably think I've gone fearfully soppy," she thought, 'or else that I'm trying to get round time, lots of dates, lots of dancing a good hand, too."

The Berliner's love of trees is so deep that in many cases, where city appropriations have not provided the necessary funds, private citizens have paid for the planting of their own streets.

Venerable, and in many cases unbeautiful, landmarks of a bygone day are being sacrificed to the demands of traffic.

Scaffoldings clamber over the facades of many old buildings which do not have to suffer demolition but are going through a much-needed face-lifting operation. The town hall, a mammoth red-brick structure, has recently emerged, rubicund and a bit garish, from an all-over bath performed by steam and cleansing acids.

Many Old Buildings Saved.

Where possible, worthwhile old buildings are being preserved. The march of time has not yet intruded on the neighborhood of the Nikolai church, where one comes across such architectural oddities as the Knoblauch Haus-literally "Garlic House"-with its vivacious rococo exterior, and its pretentious contemporary, the Ephraim house.

the Markisches museum that this latter was built by one Veitel Ephraim, an enterprising racketeer of Frederick the Great's time, He aided an embarrassed state and likewise amassed his own fortune by coining debased "thalers," nicknamed "Ephraimites," which he struck from copper with only an onion-skin thickness of silver surface. The most striking change observed in the physical aspect of the city is that on Unter den Linden. This wide avenue, because of building the new subway, has been denuded of its famous shade trees. Their roots were too deeply sunk in tradition and earth to make their lot tenable when the human moles began their burrowing. These dignified patriarchs were carefully dug up and placed in other more hospitable locations. Their place has been taken by a quadruple row of fresh little upstarts. Shockingly callow and insufficient they look.

It was Dorothea, wife of the Great Elector, who caused the wide boulevard to be laid out, and who herself planted the first linden tree in 1681. Perhaps it would have been only fair for her generation to name the avenue for the electress instead of for the tree she planted However, they made amends by giving her name to the street which parrallels Unter den Linden one block north.

In 1690 an ordinance was passed by the Elector Frederick III forbidding the burghers of the neighborhood to allow their hogs to root around on the public street, as they were injuring the trees!

Changes in Latter Days.

Berlin did not escape the westward-pushing urge which has possessed continents, countries and cities. Oldsters of today tell of open fields and woodlands in western areas where now stretch illimitable acres of concrete streets and business blocks. The inexorable thrust of building enterprise has encircled lakes and linked once widely separated communities into an urban entity In the galloping twenties of the

Keep Air Out of Steam and Hot Water Radiators So Heat Can Circulate Freely

REQUENTLY I get complaints from home-owners about failure of steam or hot water heating systems to keep radiators completely hot.

This condition is often due to air being in the coils of the radiator. This air must be released before the coils can fill with steam. This usually is simple, being remedied by automatic air valves. If your radiator has such valves and the radiators remain air-bound, unscrew the little plug at the top of the valve, tightening the plug again when all the air escapes from the valves. Putting the vent valves for a few hours in a container of kerosene also helps to eliminate the air.

However, if neither of these operations corrects the trouble-or One learns from the archives of should the coils fill with water-it would be a good policy to have an expert check the valves and remedy the difficulty.

It is possible also for hot water radiators to become air-choked. To overcome this, open the air valves once in awhile with a valve key and leave them open until water starts flowing from them. Be sure to have something handy in which to catch the water when the valves are opened.

Building Boom Wanted

REVISION of the existing housing law in order to facilitate a building boom was asked by President Roosevelt in a special message to congress. He said such legislation would ease the flow of credit and open great reservoirs of idle capital to fight the business slump. The responsibility for the success of such a program he placed squarely on labor and industry.

Specifically, the President r commended changes in the housing act which would:

1. Reduce from 51/2 per cent to 5 per cent the interest and service tharges permitted by the Federal Housing administration on loans made by private institutions.

2. Authorize the housing administrator to fix the mortgage insurance premium charge as low as 1/2 of 1 per cent on the diminishing balance of the insured mortgage instead of on the original face amount, and to 1/4 of 1 per cent on the diminishing balance of an insured mortgage where the estimated value of the property does not exceed $6,000 and where the mortgage is insured prior to July 1, 1939. 3. Increase the insurable limit from 80 to 90 per cent in cases where the appraised value of the property does not exceed $6,000. 4. Facilitate the construction and mancing of groups of houses for rent, or for rent with options to purchase, through blanket mortgages. 5. Clarify and simplify provisions for the construction of large scale rental properties through facilitating their financing. 6. Grant national mortgage associations "explicit authority to make loans on large-scale properties that are subject to special regulation by the federal housing administrator." 7. Remove the July 1, 1939, limitation on the $2,000,000,000 permitted to be outstanding in mortgages, with congress eventually limiting the insurance of mortgages prior to the beginning of construction of individ-

8. Permit insurance for repair and modernization loans as provided previous to April 1 of this year when this provision of the housing act expired.

Must Start at the Bottom.

Dewey had decided to overlook the prostitution racket, temporarily at least. Prostitution had been the chief interest of unsuccessful "clean-up" campaigns in the past; to strike against it now might cost what little public confidence he had obtained. But in the end he followed tradition. When you can't get information about those at the top, you must start at the bottom and work up. Prostitution was at the bottom, the most commonplace of the rackets.

Dewey did not know Luciano was the kingpin. He may have had a hunch, even though Luciano was "Mr. Ross" at the Waldorf-Astoria and was a most inconspicuous character. Just as he ensnared "Waxie" Gordon by making raids on the strength of evidence which might turn up later, so did he "put the finger" on Luciano.

In the early morning of February 1, 1936, twenty higher-ups were seized in a raid so secret that it gave the underworld a bad case of fitters. Next day came another swift, secret raid that brought 125 shrieking, kicking women to the Woolworth building "singing school."

The first real break came through Dave Miller, a small-time racketeer who "sang" because his heart was bad and he wanted to be home with the wife and kids. Then came the women, whose vocal chords warmed up under the promise of protection. The evidence gradually took shape; the phantom Luciano came to light as a flesh-and-blood character. He was secretly indicted in March.

Big House for "Lucky."

"Lucky" fled to Hot Springs, Ark., where he was nobly indignant when arrested. Returned to New York, he was slapped in The Tombs under $350,000 bail. When the trial arrived, Dewey made it clear that he was not after prostitutes and other underlings.

"I want the big shots. Luciano. sitting away up at the top in his apartment at the Waldorf as the czar of organized crime in this city, and his assistants who, like him, lived on the earnings of these women's bodies."

Luciano drew 30 to 50 years and his assistants were given equally strong terms. If what remained of the gang planned revenge on state's witnesses, they were dissuaded by the judge. He threatened to demand the maximum penalty if any of Dewey's "singers" were harmed.

A climax to the campaign against organized crime arrived November 2, this year, when Dewey was swept into the district attorney's office over his Tammany opponent. It was a triumph over the spoils politics which has gagged New York justice for years. To vanquished Tammany, Dewey's victory was a sting almost as severe as Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia's re-election on the Reform platform. HEADLINES FROM THE LIVES OF PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELF!

> "The Babe in the Blazing House" By FLOYD GIBBONS Famous Headline Hunter

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

These adventures provide a cross-section of life, and if they didn't show its grimmer side occasionally, they wouldn't show a faithful picture. That's why I chose for today a story I found unusually gripping because it demonstrates so clearly how close we may be at any time to tragedy. Mary Ann Grob of New York City, who tells today's adventure, was only a child of nine when it happened, and this, for me, added particular poignancy to the tale.

Imagine running back into a blazing house to rescue your eight months old baby brother only to find the smoke so dense you couldn't see what you were doing.

That's what happened to Mary. The time was the fall of 1921, around grand thrill of piecing these sim- September, and at that time Mary's father and mother and Mary's ple 934 inch blocks for quilt or three brothers lived in Thayer, a small mining town in the lower part of West Virginia.

Thayer is in a valley, situated between two large hills. To get out of er with yardage chart, diagram the valley, Mary tells us, you had to ride on a sort of incline. It was a box-shaped affair, the car, let up and down the side of a hill by means

> On this fateful morning Mary's mother and dad had to go to town, where mother was going to have her teeth fixed. Before she left she called Mary, who was the eldest child, aside and warned her to watch the three younger children, her brothers, while her parents were away. Mary had occasion later, as you will see, to recall that warning.

Of the three John was the oldest brother, then came six-year-old Pete, and last of all little Eddie, who could show only a scant eight months. Mary had her hands full keeping them all out of mischief, and has been lace. And so it is to this when night began to fall she began to glance nervously out the window, very day and generation. Easily to wondering why mother and dad didn't come. The younger children grew be understood, therefore, is the fact frightened with the approach of darkness, and, at their urging, not to ation her own uneasiness, Mary finally bolted all the doors and win-

To set the scene for this story it is necessary to explain that next to the house they had a little wash-house, where Mary's dad used to wash when he came home from work. This afternoon the stove was lighted, but with the children locked inside the house there was no one to tend it or check the dampers.

And so it came to pass that as the children sat huddled in the darkness, ueer red shadows, ghostly and lengthening, began to dance on the walls of the children's room. Alarmed, the children began to whimper, and at length, unable to stand the strain any longer, Mary went to the window and looked out to see what was causing the strange play of lights on the wall. Then she understood-the wash-house was on fire!

Eddie, the Baby, Was Missing.

Remember, this was no grown-up. This was a nine-year-old child the least important of which is the with the care and responsibility of three younger brothers on her little one with smoothly molded front shoulders. And now, as the fire spread to the main house, igniting lines and fullness at the back. The the old, dry wood like tinder, the children fled from the blazing wall into the open air, Mary as scared as any.

This will explain, perhaps, how it happened that on looking around, they discovered that eight-months-old Eddie was missing.

Mary, who was frantic by this time, berated John for leaving the baby behind, as she had understood he had taken Eddie from his crib while she was looking after getting Pete out. But John protested that One of the largest oil companies he had thought Mary was taking Eddie, and so hadn't bothered to

Meanwhile, inside the burning house, little Eddie lay asleep in his market its product at less than crib. The thought of her beloved little brother in that blazing inferno was too much for Mary. With no sager heads to dissuade her, she rushed back inside the burning house, groped her way through dark, smokefilled halls to the room where the baby lay asleep.

By this time, Mary says, the smoke was getting so thick that she could hardly see. Reaching the bedroom she found herself in the center of a dense, rolling fog, choking her, blinding her so that she could not see her hand before her face. Heat seared her eyeballs, tore at her air-famished lungs. But the nine-year-old girl had made a promise-a promise to a mother who trusted her to care for the younger ones. Mary could hear her mother's last words echoing in her ears as she groped her way to where she thought the crib should be. "Look after them while I'm gone, Mary. I'm trusting you."

Heroic Rescue by Mary.

The flames were searing hot now, but Mary had but one thought: She must get Eddie out. In the black pall she stumbled against something-"the crib"-she thought. Hurriedly she reached down, grabbed what she thought to be Eddie and almost delirious now with the desire to escape from those hungry flames she rushed out of the house into the open air.

Outside, safe under the open sky again, she thought of the bundle in her arms. In the smoke-suffused house, Mary says herself. "I did not know for sure whether I had him or not." Now, obsessed by a horrible premonition of possible disaster she dared not put into words, she forced herself to look down.

When you contemplate how easy it would be for a nearly hysterical child of Mary's age to mistake her precious burden in a fog of rolling smoke, you will understand how close is the line between happiness and tragedy. For had Mary's eyes met, not what they did see, but something else, this story would not have the happy ending it now has. Yes, it was Eddie, crying for all he was worth. And was Mary glad? You answer that one. I'll just go on to add that when Mary's mother and dad got home all that was left of the house was the standing chimney. Copyright .- WNU Service.

"I Shall Not Pass This Way"

The quotation, "I shall not pass this way again," is called "Life" and is as follows: "I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good therefore that I can do, or Facial Mugnesia any kindness that I can show to any fellow creature, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again.' The author is unknown. General proof lies with Stephen Grellet as author, although it is not found in his writings. The same idea is found in "The Spectator," by Addison. Canon Jepson has positively claimed it for Emerson and it has been attributed to Edward Courtenay, due to the resemblance to the Earl's epitaph.

There is considerable evidence to support the theory that the game of and pocketbook shown in this photogolf originated in Holland as far graph. It is not difficult to secure back as 1300 A. D. Certain it is patterns of this type. Make this that "kolf" was played in Holland attractive accessory ensemble of at the beginning of the Fifteenth century in the streets, church squares and church yards in the summer, and on the ice in the winter. This is definitely proved by old "Delft" tiles which date back to that period and show "kolfers" during the upswing and at the address of the ball. Further evidence of the Dutch origin of the game is quite apparent in its nomenclature. Such words as "stymie," "dormie," and "putt" can all be traced directly to the Dutch.

Bewitching Lace on Gala Nights

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

TO GIVE the glamour that every woman covets for gala nights, the answer throughout the centuries of lace being made a theme triumphant throughout current Paris couture showings as well as in the tashion pageantry so dramatically presented nowadays by leading style creators in our country.

A most significant contemporary event that has much to do with the present enthusiasm for lace was the grand lace ball given in Chicago this fall. Not only did this delightful occasion usher in the winter social season with real fanfare and much excitement, but the lovely tashions there presented set the pace for a "lace season."

Three models that were outstanding in this style-registering lace promenade are pictured herewith, with the thought in mind that whether you can afford to buy original models or whether perforce you needs must make your own clothes, the fact of having the best set before you proves helpful and inspirational. The woman with limited budget has every opportunity to look beautifully gowned these days (no matter how formal the function to which she may be invited) at comparatively little cost.

The present mode that voices an insistent call for formal gowns is bringing out a number of distinctly new and charming silhouettes, not beautiful dress to the right in the illustration interprets the idea with tiny ruffles starting from a deep decolletage and sweeping down fanshape to a widened hemline. The decollete at front is heart-shaped. The trimming features are all centered at the back with a sashbow of the lace to give added grace. The lace is of filmy cobweb texture in one of the newest colors, a deep blue violet shade. The gown would be handsome done in black chan-

The evening dress of silver lame lace on a white ground (center figure) does justice to the present scintillating mode. The gown is simply cut with a full skirt. The jacket of the same silver lace is detailed smartly to the nth de gree with soft flaring cuffs at the elbow, and a little stiffened standup collar, plus bow. The jacket does not close completely so as to reveal the decollete gown underneath.

The two-piece dinner gown to the left, created by Norman Hartnell, London dress designer, is made of white starched lace in an interesting manner which shows up effectively over the slip of black satin. The high neckline in front contrasts a decollete back which, by the way, is a silhouette much featured this season. What fullness there is centers at the peplum-back of the blouse and the slight train. A wide girdle of rhinestones and brilliants completes the costume.

GAY PLAID ACCENT By CHERIE NICHOLAS

If you are even a little bit handy with a needle you'll find it no trouble at all to make up the hat, scarf the new goodlooking soft-finished cotton fabric woven with a twill that looks and feels like wool. You can get it in authentic Scotch tartan plaids and being sanforized-shrunk as this fabric is it tubs without protest. Such a gay bonnet and match ing gadgets would look particularly well with a dark frock-one of the new tailored cottons which can be made so successfully at home. In any event they will add life and character to the neutral tone of a smart camel's hair coat as you see in the picture.

FAVOR HEAD VEILS FOR EVENING WEAR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS A veil with your hat in the strictest sense is not news, although we must admit the ingenious ways they are being draped and flung picturesquely and nonchalantly about is worth telling about. However, that which is news, exciting news, is the veils sans hat which socialites are wearing as romantically as any senora or senorita ever draped a mantilla head and shoulder deep.

It is a charming fashion that has come to us this season, that of a decorative veil caught with flower or ornament thrown over a beautifully coiffed head. There is romance and allure in this new evening headdress, especially when the veil is filmy and sparkles with glittering sequins.

Use Ancient Damascening in Chic Modern Compacts

Damascening, the ancient art of gold-wire inlay in metal, has found its way through reproduction in modern compacts. The art is traceable as far back as 490 B. C., and its origination is attributed to metal workers of ancient Damascus. Here. in order to cover streaks showing in the famous Damascus steel, workers developed the art of inlaying gold or silver wire into designs engraved upon the steel. The art has made museum pieces of decorated metalware throughout the centuries, and Damascene workers of ancient times competed for honors and acclaim in their fields.

Damascene compacts have simu lated designs in a great variety, and many are taken from rare prints of ancient Damascene masterpieces.

Knit Blouses Designed to Look Like Soft Woolens

Knit blouses are designed to look like soft wool and woolens are made to appear like handknit this season, so those who shun handknits can achieve the same effect with soft, lightweight woolens

Twin sweaters are shown particularly for young girls and are designed with the two parts matching or with contrasting colors for the pull-over and cardigan
