THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

That Tariff Speaker Henderson is a sturdy Scotchman, and like his fellow countryman, Carnegie, swears by a protective tariff. The party of that policy has kept Henderson in congress for twenty years and given the other Scot a chance to take so much money from the people he does not know what to do with it, and does not feel easy without giving it back to the people who have had to give into his keeping.—El Paso Daily News.

The above pertinent article is in itself a text from which might be preached many long sermons. In the first place, why should any man be empowered by law to collect an unjust tax from the people, under the guise of "protection," or any other pretext, even if he, like Carnegie, should later become liberal enough to pay a portion of his wealth thus gained back to the public, in the form of libraries and the like? It might occur, in some instances, that the people who are forced to make these contributions would not choose to invest in public libraries, they might be inclined to place these enforced loans in the necessities of life for a needy or starving family, because the taxes of the government and the increased prices paid for commodities are largely drawn from the poorer classes, or people might be able to invest their money in something which would bring them more satisfactory returns than Mr. Carnegie's library scheme. Again, Mr. Carnegie is but one in thousands who is willing to pay back, even a small portion of the illgotten gains derived from a system which compels one individual to contribute to the building up of another's business, which denies the consumer the right to purchase what he needs in any market which offers him the best prices for the article he must buy.

The results of this system of discrimination are illustrated by a comparison between the times before the so-called protective tariff was imposed and now, after more than forty years of its continuous application. Fifty years ago, when tariff taxes were collected for revenue only, the millionaire was as rare as the proverbial "hen's teeth;" now a man who cannot enter that class is considered far from being wealthy. Then the "tramp" was as little known as the millionaire, now the roads are lined with them. During the existence of the tariff for protection the classes have been created, the extremely wealthy and the extremely poor, and the breach has been continually widening between the rich and the destitute, the one built up and the other impoverished by this unjust system of taxation. All this in the name of a boastful "American institution," ostensibly in the interest of the home laborer, but which has resulted to his detriment until he is forced to organize strikes and is induced to resort to violence to secure the commonest necessities with which to keep the wolf from his door. The present state of things is the result of the protective tariff and was unknown before this system was inaugurated. How long will the American people submit to a system which has brought them only injury, which has been a reflection upon their intelligence, and which, after forty years of application, they ought to be ashamed to perpetuate?

Alfredo Gonzales, the present sheriff, was around this week, looking after his chances for the clerkship, an office he is seeking by virtue of having received the nomination from the republicans of the county.

Picacho.

Regular Correspondence.

Our enterprising merchant R. P. Hopkins has just returned from a visit to the Eastern markets where he has been purchasing his fall and winter stock of goods.

Several of the Republican candidates, Messrs. R. D. Armstrong, Robert A. Hurt and Alfredo Gonzales visited Picacho last week. The programme was as follows: Dancing, speeches by Alfredo Gonzales, R. D. Armstrong and Robert A. Hurt, more dancing, speeches by two other gentlemen, names unheard, dancing again, speech by Martinez Chavez, which was most excellent and seemed to be appreciated, then dancing till a late hour including the distribution of nuts, candy etc. Good luck to you gentlemen, and thanks for the baile.

Isidro Analla is erecting a large store in the settlement just above Picacho, Cuba, the building is in progress and carpenters are at work on the frames. Competition is a much needed article in this section of the country. We wish the gentleman much success in his new enterprise.

Home seekers are still arriving in this section. Mrs. Guyse sold her farm and interests on the Hondo to Mr. Cole for the consideration of $3,000. We extend a hearty welcome and a glad hand to the new arrivals, at the same time regretting the departure of old familiar faces from our midst.

The first month of the public school at Picacho closed last Friday, enrollment 56, average daily attendance 44. Patrons seem satisfied and everything gives promise of a good school this year.

Nogal.

Regular Correspondence.

The town has been in a rush this week on account of the American paying off.

The Free Gold Mine and Milling stockholders are visiting their property here. They held a most satisfactory meeting the 23rd.

There was a very rich strike made in the Helen Rae last Saturday.

Some of the Free Gold Mine company have gone bear hunting, but in this case Emory McKeen is director.

C. C. Bourne has charge of a force of men doing further development work on the Adams mine.

Mrs. Canning was down from White Oaks this week.

Boxes have been put in at Walnut and Nogal since last writing. The telephone line is now complete from Walnut to Parsons.

The Love of Col. Pilkington

By D. H. TALMADGE.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

COL. LEROY PILKINGTON, aged 60, iron-gray of hair and beard, gruff of voice and kind of heart, paused one afternoon in the course of a stroll upon the streets of a great western city to gratify a whim. He plunged his hand (he had but one) into his pocket and drew forth a nickel, which he inserted in the slot of a picture machine. After which he put his eyes to the holes provided for the purpose, and saw things.

Capt. Dilworth, who was with him at the time, states that for an instant he thought the colonel's intellect had collapsed, for the colonel, after a brief period of attention to the scene the nickel had revealed to his gaze, gave utterance to an exclamation indicative of shock, immediately succeeding which he executed a most undignified and unmilitary dance, while his face became distorted with emotion.

"The rose!" he cried. "The rose! At last! New York! Great heaven!" "Yes," said the captain, taking him gently by the arm; "yes, yes, I know. Come, now. People are stopping to stare at us."

"Let 'em stare," vociferated the colonel; "it is none of their business."

"Captain," he said, in a choked voice, "were you ever in love?"

The captain beheld a mental image of a certain dwelling, in which he was wont to associate with a numerous collection of family and family's family, and replied promptly in the affirmative.

"I know, I know," the colonel went on; "hang it! I've gone a bit daft, I think. Your dreams have all come true, while mine—by George! I'm not sure but mine are coming true also. I've never married, captain. You may have observed that I have retreated in good order at the first suggestion of an engagement with a woman. I have a reputation, I believe, as a hater of the sex. My mind has been made up for 20 years to die a bachelor. I have been reconciled. But now—"

He looked about him, and perceiving a restaurant near by he made a motion towards it with his hand.

"Let us go in there while I tell you about it," he suggested. "I must tell some one or I shall blow up."

The captain was nothing loath, and they entered the refreshment place, calling for viands which they did not eat.

"I fell in love with a girl when I was a very young man," the colonel began. "She was a beautiful creature, winsome as clover to a fiery colt, such as I was then, but, like the rest of the sex, I presume, in disposition. She was mettlesome and inclined to shy at the prospect of restraint. I proposed to her. She did not refuse me. "I am not certain that I like you well enough for that," she said, placing the most adorable emphasis upon the final word. "Let me wait and think it over." So I let her wait and think it over for a long time—a week, as I remember it—and then I pressed her for an answer. "Not yet," she said; "dear me, I've not had half time enough." And three times more this happened, but the last time was slightly different from the others for she told me that she had nearly decided and that I should have a definite answer at the May day festival, which was two weeks distant. "If I decide to marry you, sir," she said, with two dimples showing in her cheeks and one in her chin, "I shall wear a white rose here," and she lifted her hand to her head; "but if I decide not to marry you," and the expression of her face changed to one of gloom, and tears came to her eyes, "the rose will be red."

"Very well," said I, a trifle coldly, for I was exasperated, being naturally short of temper, as you know, and did not take kindly to a further postponement. "I had resolved that I had case she refused me an answer on this particular instance, I would drop the matter entirely, pain or no pain, and go away to the war and get shot full of holes. I was rather foolish."

"You were," assented the captain. "My wife acted in much the same manner towards me, and I simply took her by storm. It required more courage than was required to lead the old troop into action at Shiloh; but I did it, and, by Jove, sir, it was precisely what she wanted me to do."

"The colonel groaned. "I see my mistake," he said. "I saw it long ago. I should have known by the dimples had my perspicacity not been so completely outweighed by my jackassity. But, instead of doing what I should have done, I went off to the war without seeing her again. I did not attend the May day festival. I imagined that I was a devil of a fellow, which was true in a sense; and for months I kept my neck stiff and nursed my idiotic pride, or whatever it was, with considerable satisfaction. I drew fanciful pictures of the scene which would ensue upon my return to the old town. I saw myself, courteously dignified, paying the girl back in her own coin; and taking her at last, condescendingly, as my wife. I heard myself saying, ironically: 'Why, my dear! Where is the rose you were to wear?' Is the time not yet come for me to know my fate?" And I gloated in the tears I saw her shed. Dear, dear! How differently it all came about!

"When I returned she was not there. She had gone to visit a relative in California, and I was compelled to rejoin the regiment without having seen her. I wrote to her at the address they gave me at home, but we were ordered away to Georgia then, and if she ever sent a reply to my letter I did not get it. I did not go home again until the war was over. She was not there, and the aunt with whom she had lived was dead. None seemed to know where she had gone. She had left no forwarding address at the post office. She had told her friends that she was going west, that was all.

"So for ten years thenceforth I labored most strenuously for money, and spent it in searching for her. I visited California, where I obtained a slight trace; the girl had been there, but had sailed away on a boat, together with her relatives. I went here and there and everywhere, taking no one into my confidence, and of course getting no reward. Finally I gave up. For 20 years I have been—well, you know what I have been, captain; a moderately successful man, as the term is used; a modest patron of the arts and sciences and of the manly sports; but to woman—adamant. This afternoon in that picture of a New York street gathering I saw her face, and upon her bonnet was a rose. It may have been white or it may have been red—I could not tell its color. I recognized the locality by the buildings. It seems to me more than likely that she lives in that quarter of the city, and, such being the case, it will not be difficult to find her. I go to New York to-night. It may be—"

The captain involuntarily extended his hand and the colonel grasped it warmly. Then they arose and passed into the street.

"It may be," continued the colonel, clearing his throat and throwing back his shoulders, "that I am to comb in for a share of love's young dream after all. I am no longer young, to be sure, but it is the same dream. Ah—er—ahem—captain, will you oblige me by information relative to the state of my cuticle? Do I blush?"

"You do not," replied the captain, frankly.

"Is not my pulse somewhat accelerated?" asked the colonel, presenting his wrist to the other's grasp.

"Nary," returned the captain; "it is like an eight-day clock."

"I go to New York to-night, at any rate," said the colonel, a bit disgustedly. "I shall write you, captain; and in the event of my bringing home a bride I shall look to you to make fitting arrangements for our reception. See to it personally that we have the bridal suite at the Grand Union, nicely warmed and ventilated and perfumed and all that sort of thing, you know. And a good carriage waiting at the station for us. And your wife and a few female friends to smile at us when we step from the Pullman might have a good effect and convey a heap of joy to the young wo—er—the bride's heart."

"I shall be only too happy to make the arrangements," declared the captain. "I trust you may have your fondest hopes realized, my dear friend. You certainly deserve immense happiness. God bless you, sir."

"May He bless you, sir," returned the colonel.

And then they parted, the captain charging home at a double quick to tell his wife the story, while the colonel marched rapidly but with dignity to his apartments to prepare for his journey.

He was absent six weeks. At the end of the second week a letter came from him to the captain. It was very brief:

"Have not found her yet," it said. "Have obtained copy of slot machine photograph, and am determined to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

At short intervals thereafter other letters came, all brief, all to the same effect, and the captain began to fear that his friend was doomed forever to disappointment. But at last, at the close of the fifth week, came a letter the very outside of which shrieked triumphantly. The captain's hands trembled with much violence as he opened it, and thence his eyeglasses sprang from his nose.

"I have found her," were the first words that greeted him from the hastily scribbled page. "I have found her, and the rose she wore in the picture was white. I have talked with her face to face after all these years, and I have seen her face dimple as it used to dimple, though, alas! the dimples now are all but lost in wrinkles and the sparkle of her eye is but a suggestion of the long ago. She wept when she saw me, and I wept—d—n you, sir, I did, and I am proud of it—when she told me that she had worn a white rose upon her head every day for 30 years. And after awhile she introduced me to her husband, a retired sea captain, comfortably provided with this world's goods, whom she met in California; and to her children, of whom she has three; and to the five of her nine grandchildren, who are at home. She has been the companion of her husband in his voyages, else I should probably have found her and made a thundering ass of myself. She has been around and around the world—and she has not failed for a single day to wear a white rose. Talk of fidelity! Great heaven! Is it not wonderful? I seem hardly worthy of it. I have enjoyed my trip. Shall return next week. Do not trouble yourself about the bridal suite. Want to see you. Want to rest. I am not so young as I once was, but, by George, I have got a big load off my mind! Have not felt exactly right about that girl for 30 years. Do not suppose she has felt exactly right, either. She gave me the rose she had in her hair. She is not going to bother about wearing it any more. Thirty years is a very long time. Whoop!"

"Well, I'll be blowed!" ejaculated the captain.

He handed the letter to his wife, and then departed, somewhat precipitately, for the nearest telegraph office, where he scrawled upon a blank the word "Congratulations," which action he has been ever since at a loss to explain.

A German Possibility.
For our part, we hope Emperor William will compete for the America cup and enter the next race with a sort of German Shamrock. It would be an inspiring spectacle, thinks the Chicago Tribune, to see a magnificent yacht bearing the name of Das Kaiserliche Koenigliche Gruene Kleeblatt in full chase for that cup.

Hereafter no physician who is unable to speak the English language will be given a certificate allowing him to practice his profession in the territory of Hawaii.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

THE GATEMAN.

At the railroad crossing the gateman stands,
Turning the crank in his faithful hands.
Bent and wrinkled, yet strong and true
To the daily duty 'tis his to do.
The sun may shine, or the clouds may frown,

July be torrid, December cold,
Yet there, in his suit of well-worn brown,
He guards the way for the young and old.
Keeping with steady, tireless brain
A watch for the inbound, outbound train,
He signals the passage of each through the town,
As with "Tinkle!" and "Tinkle!" the gates go down.

How the waiting children caper and dance,
And the restless horses curvet and prance!
How the servant-maids, upon errands bent,
View the intruders with discontent—
While heavy car and elegant coach
Rumble along on the shiny rails,
And on the busy one's time encroach

With the vexing burden delay entails—
As, mindful of duty's stern command,
In spite of impatience, of fret, of frown,
The gateman puts to the crank his hand,
And steadily turning, the gates go down.
Oh! I would that on every road to-day,
Where sin and its train hold right of way,
Some gateman as ready as this might stand—
Turning the crank in his faithful hand—
That ever when danger should threaten those

Whose path must cross the enticer's
track,
Some gate a-tinkle might interpose,
And hold from disgrace the weak ones back—

Some safeguard be built for unwary feet,
To halt them midway in the perilous street,
And to signal to each, spite of fret or frown:

"Stand back for your life, while the gates are down!"

—Marcia M. Selman, in Youth's Companion.

EVENING HYMN.

Now the birds are sleeping,
Now the shadows fall;
Now the stars are keeping
Friendly watch o'er all;

Now in cabin lowly,
Now in stately hall,
Sleep, the spirit holy,
Calls the children all.

"Come, ye little children,
Ere your eyelids close,
Ere my song bewildering
Lulls you to repose.

"Kneel to God the Giver,
Bless Him for the day.
Pray that He will ever
Guide you on your way.

"Faithful, kind and tender,
God is ever near;
Now in sweet surrender,
Rest you, children dear!"

Thus in cabin lowly,
Thus in stately hall,
Sleep, the spirit holy,
Calls the children all.
—Laura E. Richards, in Wellspring.

TO A CROW.

Thy breast triumphant 'gainst the wintry
blast,
Or the snow, following fast,
Thou cheerily dost sound thy trump forlorn
From the dead field of corn.

Naught daunted by the rough and frozen ground,
Thou takest thy way around;
Grotesquely waddling, loudly triumphing!
Descanting on the spring. . . .

What solemn conclave of thy kind shall stand,
That day, on the arable land!
Cocking wise eyes where once the scarecrow stood,
Sentry on hardihood!

What comic copies of thyself shall wait
On the creaking pasture gate!
What a watchful eye art on them and thee,
Thy mate in the sycamore tree! . . .

Adieu, brave bird, adieu! . . . and as thy flight
Hastens to meet the night,
So may our hearts, triumphant, spring to greet
Fate's dark, swift-coming feet.

So may our souls, unflinching, rise serene
Where doubt and death have been,
Into the night and Silence: our last cry
A jubilant song, as Life goes hurrying by!
—Evelyn Phinney, in the Atlantic.

Sending Food Our Way.

Ship loads of potatoes are arriving at New York from Ireland, Scotland and Belgium.—Evidently, says the Chicago Record-Herald, all the world doesn't propose to get all its food from Uncle Sam all the time.

Acquiring Horse Sense.

In point of maturity a horse ten years old is said to be the equivalent of a man of 40. Both, declares the Chicago Tribune, ought to have acquired good horse sense at that age.

Crematories in Italy.

Although the pope pronounced against cremation in 1886, Italy now has more crematories than any other country, according to the Flamme, the German periodical devoted to this sub-

THE COMMONER.

[Mr. BRYAN'S Paper.]

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his reviews of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1.00 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and WHITE OAKS EAGLE together for one year for $2.00. The regular subscriptions price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $2.50.

Thrice-a-Week World.

Time has demonstrated that the Thrice-a-Week World stands alone in its class. Other papers have imitated its form but not its success. This is because it tells all the news all the time and tells it impartially, whether that news be political or otherwise. It is in fact almost a daily at the price of a weekly and you cannot afford to be without it.

In addition to news, it publishes first-class serial stories and other features suited to the home and fireside.

The Thrice-a-Week World's regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year and this pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and WHITE OAKS EAGLE one year for $2.00.
