Chief Justice Hughes In Tribute to Red Cross

One of the finest tributes ever naid the American Red Cross and its membership was that by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, of the United States Supreme Court, on the occasion of the fiftieth birthday anniversary of the organization on May 21 of this year. Mr. Hughes said:

"The American Red Cross repre sents the united voluntary effort of the American people in the ministry of mercy. It is the finest and most effective expression of the American heart. It knows no partisanship. In the perfection of its cooperation, there is no blemish of distinctions by reason of race of creed or political philosophy.

"However we may differ in all things else, in the activities of the Red Cross we are a united people. None of our boasted industrial enterprises surpasses it in efficiency. ... It moves with the precision and the discipline of an army to achieve the noblest of human aims.

"The American Red Cross is not only first in war but first in peace. The American people rely upon its ministrations in every great catastrophe. It has given its aid in over one thousand disasters. When, as we hope, war will be no more, still the Red Cross, in the countless activities of relief and rehabilitation, will continue to function as the or ganized compassion of our country

$\mathbf{``More}$ genuine satisfaction than any car I ever owned"

THE FORD is good-looking. It is safe. Comfortable. Speedy. Reliable. Long-lived. Economical. Everything a good car should be.

There is, too, an added something about it that brings enthusiastic comments from every one who has ever driven a Ford . . , the joy it puts in motoring.

"I have been a car owner continuously for nearly 20 years," writes a motorist connected with a leading university. "During this period I have bought eleven new automobiles. Eight of the eleven were in the middle-price field, one cost three thousand dollars, and the last is a Ford I purchased thirteen months ago.

"In the light of this experience I can say in all sincerity that I have derived more genuine satisfaction from the Ford than any car I ever owned. In saying this, I am thinking in terms of comfort, safety, driving pleasure, ease of control and economy. My next car will also be a Ford because it will give me what I want at a price I can afford to pay."

When you get behind the wheel of the Ford and drive it yourself you will know it is a truly remarkable car at a low price. You will like it when you first buy it. You will become more and more enthusiastic the longer you drive it.

After thousands of miles of driving you will say "it's a great car." Its economy will save you many dollars.

This period through which the world is struggling is more than an economic crisis. It involves mare than a study of strategic plans to ambuscade the dollars which fled.

Drunk with wealth, we have strayed a long way from the fundamental and eternal truth. We have been living in a house stuck upon golden stilts. And it has crashed.

In our agony and suffering we have discovered that Jesus Christ meant what he said. The Golden Rule was not a pleasant homily intended for reward of merit cards with silk fringe on the edges and diamond dust shining on the snow scenes. It was a simple statement of the eternal law that keeps the stars in the skies and the world turning on its axis.

We speak of breaking the law and commandments. You can break them but they break you. "Love one another" was more than an admonition to light the path of virtue. It was the statement of an eternal principle upon which all law, all philosophy, all business, all ethics, all civilization rests. Like all the doctrines left by the Christ, this was the sublimity of common sense-the finality of practicality-the only sure foundation upon which civilization can rest.

During these money-glutted years we have tried each to go our own way alone. Years of greed and money lust have ended with this terrible lesson: That wealth evaporates and leaves men stark and with naked

Our guess is that when a project started there that everyone gets behind it and stays back of it until t goes over. What a fine spirit. There is scarcely a town that couldn't have much more than it does if every one in it would rally loyally behind every project and work on it until it was put over and then turn to the next plan and put it over.

This is the thing that makes good towns. It is the germ that once it in fects a community, gives it the reputation of being a live town.

CHAPTER XXVII

Every one in authority realized that all resources the allies could muster would be required to meet successfully the great offensive of the central powers expected in the spring, but to use them effectively close co-operation among commanders would be imperative. With this in mind I proposed to Premier Clemenceau that the commanders in chief and chiefs of staff get together to examine the situation and, if possible, determine a general program of combined action.

M. Clemenceau at once approved the suggestion. It was also favorably received by General Foch, who, it will be recalled, was chief of the French general staff. I proposed that the meeting be held at my hendquarters, but the French selected Complegne, Petain's G. H. Q.

At the meeting, January 24, 1918, Robertson, for the British, spoke first, and suggested a general statement as to: (1) Mutual support between allied armies. (2) Situation as to reserves. (3) Question of troops in Italy. (4) Situation as to the transportation of the American army and facilities given Petain Favored Defensive.

General Petain thought that for the present the allies would be forced to remain on the defensive because of lack of men. He said the French army had ninety-seven divisions with an infantry strength of from 5,000 to 6,000 men each, some thirty-odd of these divisions being in reserve and the rest in the trenches, besides eight cavalry divisions, two of which were dismounted and six mounted.

All divisions he thought could be kept up until April if there should be no fighting, but later on, even without a battle, he would have to break up five divisions to maintain the others, the six mounted cavalry divisions would have to be reduced to four, and before the end of the year the total force would have to be reduced by twenty divisions, Foch Was for Counteroffensive. General Foch declared that the best means of halting a strong and persistent offensive was a powerful counter-

"The German offensive at Verdun was stopped not by our resistance there but by our offensive on the Somme in 1916," said General Foch, "Such an operation is possible only when foreseen and prepared beforehand. In upon the amount of shipping available for the transportation of our troops. and that the time when they would be needed was near at hand. As there had been some reference to amalgamation, I also took occasion to emphasize the point that we expected as a matter course that the American army would have its own front as an independent force and not be used merely as a reserve to be sent here and there. One insuperable reason, I said, why we could not amalgamate with the Frnech was the difference in language, and l added that we would not use our troops in that way at all unless it be came absolutely necessary.

I then discussed our problems, call ing attention to the delays at the French ports and our shortage of rail transportation, and touched on the backward state of procurement of of equipment, munitions and airplanes They all appeared surprised to learn of our difficulties, especially General Foch, although, even as chief of the general staff, he apparently could be interfere in matters handled directly the ministry. It was astonishing to find how little comprehension any of them had of the enormous task that confronted the Americans.

Foch said: "None of these questions has been referred to me," whereupon Petain retorted that "one should not walt until such things are brought to his attention, but should look around and find them." Petain added at once that he would send an official to study our situation, and Haig later sent one of his officers, who offered many suggestions out his own experience.

It was the sense of the conference that every assistance should be given us in getting our troops across, and all seemed fully to realize that no suc cessful offensive could be undertaken without them.

Blise Favors British Plan.

Conversations with General Robert son contin ed the next day at the Crillon hotel in Paris, with General Bliss present. The same arguments were repeated in favor of incorporating American units into British divisions, and General Bliss expressed himself in favor of the Robertson plan. 1 was forced to declare myself then and there. My stand was not quite what Robertson had expected, and the meeting adjourned with the position of all concerned no longer in doubt.

General Bliss and I met later by an pointment to talk the matter over be-that the entire front must be considered as a whole and not the French as one part and the British as another. The plan must envisage them together preparing for offensive action on a common battlefield with all the forces at their disposal."

General Robertson expressed accord with Foch, but he did not see where or with what means such an offensive could be executed, and stated that the war could not be won by remaining on

"Give us back the troops from Salonika and we will commence offensives," said General Hair

"We were not speaking of offensives, but of counteroffensives," General Foch replied.

General Robertson remarked that of course the French and British could relaforce each other and make counterattacks, and then asked: "Could they do more than that?"

"Not without the Americans," General Petain answered him.

Dependent Upon U. S. General Robertson then said: "I the question from all angles, until think our only hope lies in American finally he came around to my view and reserves," and he wanted to hear from said: "I think you are right, and I

I stated that but few of the allied have taken." authorities seemed to realize that tween ourselves and, it possible, come to an understanding. After some discable his views to Washington and ask for a decision. It was not my policy en or at any other time to put anything up to Washington that I could possibly decide myself. This would have been the last thing to do in this case, especially as the secretary had left in my hands the determination as to how our troops should be employed. For two men in our positions to have appealed in this way would have indicated a clash, and Washington had enough trouble; besides, the secretary could not possibly have been sufficiently in touch with the undercurrent of these negotiations to make a wise decision. So I said, "Veil, Bliss, do you know what would happen if we should do that? We would both be relieved from further duty in France, and that is exactly what we should deserve."

We then spent some time examining shall back you up in the position you

Once General Bliss and I had reached an understanding as to our attitude toward amalgamation of our troops with the British he gave me his support in later conferences. When we saw the British representatives for further talks at Versallies January 29, 1918, all their arguments were met frankly and squarely. After they had presented their case Prime Minister Lloyd George asked Bliss for his views, to which he replied:

"Pershing will speak for us and whatever he says with regard to the disposition of the American troops will have my approval."

An agreement was then signed by Mr. Lloyd George, General Maurice and myself as set forth in the follow ing copy of the memorandum submitted and lated cabled to Washington:

"In order to meet the situation as presented by Sir William Robertson and hasten the arrival and training of troops, it is proposed that the British government use the available sea transportation in question for bringing over the personnel of entire diviunder the following conditions: "1. That the infantry and auxiliary troops of these divisions he trained with British divisions by battalions. under such plan as may be agreed

"2. That the artillery be trained un der American direction in the use of French material as at present. "3. That the higher commanders and staff officers be assigned for training and experience with corresponding units of the British army. "4. That when sufficiently trained. these battalions be reformed into regiments and that when the artillery is fully trained all the units comprising each division be united under their

"5. That the above plan be carried out without interference with the plans now in operation for bringing over American forces own officers for service.

"6. That question of supply be arranged by agreement between the British and American commanders in chief. "7. That question of arms and equipnent be settled in similar manner."

War Council Meets Again. The supreme war council began its third session January 30. At the open ng session Mr. Lloyd George made s statement in some detail of the situation on the allied fronts. He then spoke of the large number of casualties the allies had suffered during 1917 and in a very pointed manner declared that the costly offensives had projuced no tangible results. But in lead, he said, the allies now found heriselves short of man power at a ritical period of the war. His sherp riticism was evidently directed at Sir louglas Halg and General Robertson. nt neither was given an opportunity

The military representatives pre ented a joint note with reference to military policy, as directed at the De ember meeting, and the opinion given as identical with that of the confernce, at Complegne January 24 and iso in August at the meeting in Paris. except that the campaign under Gen eral Allenby, then in progress in Palestine, should continue. It will be realled that these two informal confernces of commanders in chief had contuded that the silles should remain on the defensive on all fronts until the Americans should arrive in sufficient force to warrant the offensive.

See No End of War Until 1919. The joint note was approved as the standing, as suggested by the French. that no white troops should be sent from France to Palestine. It was decidedly the opinion of M. Clemenceau and of all others present who expressed themselves that the war could not be ended until 1919, when the American army, it was thought, would reach its

The allied forces at the moment were superior in all active fronts, except in the Balkans, but the Greek mebilization, when completed, would add sufficient strength to give the allies the advantage there also. The American strength was then negligible, but the prospect was that we should have a few divisions ready for service by June, and by September possibly ser-tenteen or the equivalent of thirty-

The danger on the western front lay in the continuous increase of the German forces and in their ability to concentrate in turn against the French and British, and as neither had suffi clent reserves of their own it was that unless some arrangement could be made between them for better co-ordination and support the war might easily be lost before the Americans should arrive.

Plan Allied Recerve. The study of this problem by the military representatives led to another joint note which proposed a plan for the organization of a general allied reserve. It provided that the British, French and Italian armies should each set apart a certain number of divisions to constitute this reserve, which would be called into action only in a great emergency. The discussion of this question became acrimonious. Hair and Petaln both pointed out that they would be short of divisions very soon in case of severe fighting and presented figures on the subject that were very disturbing.

But the council's scheme was cut and dried. The recommendations set forth in the note were adopted then and there by the council. The general reserve was created and its control was placed under an executive war board to consist of Generals Foch, representing the French, chairman; Bliss, the Americans; Cadorna, the Italians, and a British general officer to be

At this meeting Mr. Lloyd George ignated Gen. Sir Henry Wilson as the British representative, to the very evident disappointment of General Robertson, who was present at the ses-sion. The selection of Wilson was regarded by the British high command of their conduct of the war. In the next installment General Pershing tells of the unpleasant methods of French Bureau officials.

BROTHERS IN THE WEST by Robert Raynolds

The Harper Prize Novel for 1931 was written by a new author whose work won in competition with some well known names. It has been acclaimed by the reviewers as a novel more essentially American than anything that has ever been written before. To say the least it is a richly with the strange mystic poetry of the Mountains and the plains,

It is the account of the wanderings of two brothers, David and Charles. Born of the plains, keen of eye, tireless of body, they lived a roving life, knowing no fixed abode. Then David saw and loved Karin. Without hesitation he carried her off and married her. One after another the little caravan attracted others and after years of wandering, settled at last in the shadow of the Rockies.
