A STRANGE ISLAND.

Americans Should Be Interested in This Place.

While Americans and Canadians have been running over the world in search of novelty, exploring the maiarial jungles of Africa and the frozen strange peoples and customs, they have overlooked a very strange country close at hand. The island of Anegada is one of the strangest of all the strange places in the world.

First of all, where is Anegada? It is one of the Virgin islands and it lies northeast of Porto Rico, one of the Great Antilles, and its first peculiarity is that it is flat and low, the neighboring isles all being steep and mountainous. It is nine miles long and two miles across, and lies so low that in heavy gales the sea makes a clean breach over the lower portions of it, whence its name-for anegada is the Spanish for "drowned island." Next we come to its strange history in 1881 it had only 719 inhabitants, of whom but three were white people. Its population is noted for idleness, and the main occupation for many years was wrecking-for an extensive and very dangerous coral reef surrounds the island and once gave it very melancholy notoriety. But since the establishment of the lighthouse on the island of Sombrero (47 miles to the eastward), there have been few, tering at a you must consider joins if any, wrecks on Anegada, since the at one end only of the key-line, or main cause of the shipwrecks was the you will get repetitions. Anegada is the home of very numerous and singular tropical plants, but it is perhaps rather more noteworthy for its immense numbers of mosquitoes, gallinippers and scorpions, not to speak of venomous and other reptiles. The surrounding seas are rich in scale and shell fish of many

It is not an easy matter to reach the island. A few years ago an attempt was made to open mines upon it, but nothing came of the effort but disappointment and loss. Among the many disagreeable features of life in this hot and steaming climate is the presence of large salt ponds, which in the dry season give out an intolerable stench. and the same ponds in the wet season fill up with singular rapidity and flood

It would be hard to find anywhere a hotter, wetter, worse-smelling, or more generally disagreeable place to live than Anegada; but, singularly enough. it appears to be for the most part a pretty healthy place—at least for the natives, of whom nearly all are black or colored.

In the ante-colonial days, the In dians used to come hither in their canoes; but no Indian could ever bring himself to make a permanent home in Anegada, with its steaming fogs, its squalls, its sea floods, its fresh-water inundations, its strong smells and its dense swarms of in sects: and no American could be per suaded to spend more than 24 hours on the island, in spite of its strange

There are 255 different ways of cutting the board into two pieces of exactly the same size and shape. Every way must involve one of the five cuts shown in diagrams A. B. C. D and E. To avoid repetitions by reversal and reflection we need only consider cuts that enter at the points a, b and c. But the exit must always be at a point in a straight line from the entry through the center. This is the most important condition to remember. WANTING TOO MUCH PROFIT

Why People Sometimes Turn Their Trade from Heme to the Mail-Order Houses.

With price cutting, short weight packages, trading stamps, advertising fakirs, box-car merchants, mail-order houses, dead beats and numerous other burdens to carry and contend with, the life of the storekeeper is far from a happy one. He rises in the morning with the tune of the lark, works hard all the day long, and goes to bed at night not knowing whether the price of oil will be raised on him the next day or not. Then there is the home paper that the merchant sometimes reads, and it makes him tired to learn that he has been for years. acting the chump by not advertising in its pages in the right way. There is a lot of retailers who kick and howl about people sending to mail-order houses for goods and never once think that they, the merchants, are to blame for the matter. The other day the writer met a farmer. He was an interesting kind of chap, pretty well up in the ways of the wicked world, the methods of the boxcar merchants and the manners of the local storekeepers. He said that he had been buying goods from a few of the mail-order houses for the past few years. He commenced patronizing them in this way: He wanted to buy a small rifle for his son at Christmas time. He went to his local hardware dealer, found that the rifle would cost him $2.50. His son had seen the same thing advertised by a mail-order house for $1.10. He told his father that he could buy it for that. The storekeeper wouldn't come down a cent on his price; in fact, told the man to send away and get it. He did so. The rifle cost him, laid down, $1.35, co $1.15 less than he could have bought it at home. This is a poor argument in favor of the home store. The dealer, could have sold the rifle as low as the mail-order concern could lay it down in his town, but he wouldn't. The result was one more man became a buyer on the mail-order house plan. This same man told me that he sent for it, cost him 72 cents laid day down to him by the rural mail carsome merchants carry a small line of merchandise on which they think the should make 200 per cent, profit omore. There is little call for this class, and when a sale is made they want too large profits. Their custom ers don't like this treatment. They feel it is not the right kind of a deal. and are sore over it. It doesn't pay the merchant to mark his special goods so high, for it is just on this class of goods that the cataloguhouses make low prices to attract at tention and make the people think .

After Other Treatment Failed-Raw Eczema on Baby's Face Had Lasted Three Months-At Last Doctor Found Cure.

"Our baby boy broke out with eczema on his face when one month old. One place on the side of his face the size of a nickel was raw like beefsteak for three months, and he would cry out when I bathed the parts that were ore and broken out. I gave him three months' treatment from a good doctor, but at the end of that time the child was no better. Then my doctor ecommended Cuticura. After using a cake of Cuticura Soap, a third of a box of Cuticura Ointment, and half a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent he was well and his face was as smooth as any baby's. He is now two years and a half old and no eczema has reappeared. Mrs. M. L. Harris, Alton, Kan., May 14 and June 12, 1907."

WAYS OF COOKING CABBAGE.

Bucculent Vegetable Need Not Always Be Served Boited.

Although cabbage has often been called the poor man's vegetable, many appetizing and attractive dishes can be made from it. We give several good recipes:

An unusually good salad was recent y served at a luncheon. The inside of a sood-sized cabbage was cut out. and the space filled with a mixture of chopped celery, cucumbers and peppers dressed with oil and vinegar, and well seasoned. The top of the cabbage was replaced after the filling was put in, and the head was then placed on a plate in front of the hostess, who did the serving. The guests wondered if they beheld another mysterious Jack Horner pie. Another way to use a head of cabbage is to follow the same plan, only filling the hole with finely chopped meat, a little onion, and bread crumbs Bake until tender and then cut in slices and serve with a cream sauce. This makes a very good luncheon dish or an entree at dinner.

Fried cabbage is particularly good at this time of year. First boil the cabbage until tender, and when colo cut into small pieces. Cut some slices of bacon into strips and put them in the frying pan. When they have commenced to cook, and the bottom of the pan is well greased, add the cabbage and fry until a light brown. Season with salt and pepper.

For creamed cabbage, boil the cab bage tender, drain off the water and put into the pot with a large teaspoon ful of flour, a tablespoonful of butter a little salt, and half a cupful of milk.

Cook, stirring, until the sauce is most important as well as her most generally. THOUSANDS OF useful garment. If her shirt waists LIES HAVE LEARNED THE are badly made or shoes shabby that OF PERUNA and its value in the is a minor consideration, but her sweater must be immaculate and up to date. Every girl likes to wear nothing but white during the outing season and great is her disgust when her mother insists upon her having a gray sweater for economy's sake in the firm belief that the darker shade keeps clean longer and that all woolen goods are impossible to wash.

If proper care is taken sweaters can be washed all the time without hur! ing their shade and color. Fill a large bowl or basin with warm water and soapsuds, add a teaspoonful of powdered borax to keep the wool from becoming hard and stiff. If the sweater is white put a little blueing in the water every time it is rinsed. This will prevent it from turning a deep apt to do.

After washing wring out, then pin to a large bed pillow. Be sure not to stretch the sweater or it will lose its shape.

Cake for Small Family. To make a layer cake, bake one good layer, cut it in either halves or thirds, lay one piece on top of the other, and proceed to frosten or ice as amount of material for an ordinary cake. Divide batter in four parts. One part may be baked as a marble cake, after dividing it into three parts add one-half cake grated chocolate, to one-third leave plain and add two teaspoons strawberry flavoring to the last third. Pour a little of each in a pan until all is gone and you have a fine marble cake. One-half pound chopped nuts added to the second part will make a nut cake. One-half cup each of chopped dates and nuts, one-quarter cup each of chopped figs, citron and raisins. one-half teaspoon each of grated nut-mes cinnamon and cloves will make a fine fruit cake. The last fourth will make a nice loaf cake.

Lacquered Brass. Lacquered brass must not be allowed to get black, but should be still new and bright, and thus insure a longer and brighter existence for it. It should be washed occasionally with slightly warm, soapy water, then dried with a soft cloth and polished with a clean, dry chamois leather. In damp weather the lacquered brass should be well rubbed every day with way the lacquer can be kept beautifully bright. Making Jars Airtight. Many housekeepers have trouble with keeping airtight anything that is put up in jars. If, however, after a jar or bottle is corked it is sealed with a mixture of beeswax and rosin there is no danger of air getting at it. To make this sealing mixture put two ounces of yellow beeswax and four ounces of rosin in a small tin pan, which is then set in a larger pan of hot water. Stir constantly until the wax and rosin are well blended. Apply while still liquid to the outside of the corked jar or bottle.

Turnip Salad. Pare and cut in dice four medium sized turnips; boil in salted water until tender, changing the water several times. Drain in colander and when cool add one cupful of rich mayonnaise. Serce on lettuce leaves. Apricot Sauce.

Use one pound of evaporated apples, one-fourth pound of dried apricots, stew together, stirring while boiling, to mix and prevent burning.

ton's door, and thus satisfy himself as to what was doing so mysteriously. There was not a cowardly drop in Jim's circulation. But if foul play was abroad for Williston that night, he, Jim, of course, was spotted and would never be permitted to reach the house. It would mean a useless sacrifice. Now, he needed to be alive. and active service. Afterwards-well, it was all in the day's work. It wouldn't so much matter then. It touched spurs lightly, bent his head against the friction of the air and urged his horse to the maddest, wildest race he had ever run since that day long ago, to be forgotten by neither, when he had been broken to his master's will.

Paul Langford dropped one shoe nervelessly to the wolfskin in front of forget? his bed. Though his bachelor room was plain in most respects, plain for the better convenience of the bachelor hands that had it to put in rights every day-with the exception of a cook. Langford kept no servant-the wolfskin here, an Indian blanket thrown over a stiff chair by the table, a Japanese screen concealing the ugly little sheet-iron stove that stood over in its corner all the year round, gave evidence that his tastes were really luxurious. An oil lamp was burning dimly on the table. The soot of many burnings adhered to the chimney's inner side.

The sound of galloping hoof-beats on the hard road below came up to him. A solitary horseman was coming that way and he was putting his horse to the limit, too.

"Who the-deuce," began Langford. 'It's Jim's cow pony as sure as I'm a sinner! What brings him home at that pace, I wonder? Is he drunk?" He peered out indifferently. The hoof-beats rang nearer and nearer, clattered through the stable yards and, before they ceased, two or three revolver shots rang out in rapid succession. Jim had fired into the air to arouse the house.

Springing from his reeking bronco, he ran quickly to the stable and threw wide the door. Here the boss, the first to gain the outside because already dressed, found him hastily saddling a fresh mount. Langford asked

"God! The girl!" he cried aloud. "What did you say, boss?" asked Jim, pounding alongside.

"Nothing!" said Langford, curtly. He spurred his mare savagely. In the shock of surpise, and the sting that his neglected word brought him. There was a crying need for his good he had forgotten the girl-Williston's "little girl" with the grave eyes-the girl who was not 10 but 20 and more -the girl who had waited for him, whom he had sent on her long way alone, joyously, as one free of a duty that promised to be irksome the girl who had brought the blood to his face when, ashamed, he had galloped off to the spring—the girl who had closed her door when a man's curious eyes had roved that way. How could he

The little cavalcade swept on with increased speed, following the lead of the master. Soon the sound of shooting was borne to them distinctly through the quiet night.

"Thank God, boys!" cried Langford digging in his spurs once more. "They are not surprised! Listen! God! What a plucky fight! If they can only hold out!"

At that moment a tiny tongue o flame leaped up away to the front darning eggs, which proved to be exof them, gleaming in the darkness like a beacon light. Now there were two -they grew, spread, leaped heavenward in mad revel. Langford's heart sank like lead. He groaned in an exceeding bitterness of spirit. The worst had happened. Would they be in time? These claim shanties burn like paper. And the girl! He doubted not that she had sustained her share of the good fight. She had fought like a man, she must die like a man would be the outlaw's reasoning. He believed she would die like a manif that meant bravely-but something clutched at his heart-strings with the thought. Her big, solemn eyes came back to him now as they had looked when she had lifted them to him gravely as he sat his horse and she had said she had waited for him. Was she waiting now?

The boys rallied to the new impetus gloriously. They knew now what it meant and their hardy hearts thrilled to the excitement of it, and the danger. They swept from the main trail into the dimmer one leading to Williston's, without diminution of speed. Presently, the boss drew rein with a suddenness that would have played havoc with the equilibrium of less seasoned horsemen than cowboys. They followed with the precision and accord of trained cavalrymen. Now and then could be seen a black, sinister figure patrolling the burning home stead, but hugging closely the outer skirt of darkness, waiting for the doomed door to open.

"Boys!" began Langford. But he never gave the intended command to charge at once with wild shouting and shooting to frighten away the maraudmoment the door opened and Williston and his daughter stepped out in full view of raitier and rescuer. Would there be parley? A man, slouching in his saddle, rode up into the circle of was something hauntingly familiar about the droop of the shoulders. That was all; hardly enough to hang a Langford raised his rifle quickly. His nerves were perfectly steady. His sight was never truer. His buffet went straight to the rifle arm of the outlaw; with a ringing shout he rallied his comrades, spurred his pony forward, and the little party charged the astounded raiders with a fury of shots that made each rustler stand well to his own support, leaving the Williston's, for the time being, free from their attention.

The desperadoes were on the run They cared to take no risk of identihow many there were . There seemed a half-dozen or more, but probably four or five at the most would tell their number.

The flames were sinking. Willis ton had disappeared. The boys scattered in wild pursuit. Wheeling his horse, Langford was in time to see a big, muscular fellow swing a girlish form to the saddle in front of him. Quick as a flash he spurred forward. lifted his heavy Colt's revolver high over his head and brought it down on the fellow's skull with a force that knocked him senseless without time for a sigh or moan. Interesting Use of Gas. A very interesting use for producer gas is made in a factory in Jersey City, where tempering of metal to be made into curtain springs is successfully and economically done with its heat. Coke fires were formerly utilature varied to such an extent that a great deal of the material was spoiled. With producer gas an absolutely constant temperature is secured and the work is done in a more cleanly manner, with no rossibility of error as to the degree of heat. Consequently the waste heretofere encountered has been reduced to uct is absolutely uniform.

NOVEL USE FOR WOODEN EGGS.

Made to Darn Stockings On, They Finally Served as Knobs for Hatpins.

One of the innumerable things that the manufacturers of turned-wood goods make is the darning egg, for use as an aid in darning stockings.

These eggs are commonly provided each with a handle of the same kind of wood, which screws into one end. A. while ago there was received at the New York office of a turned goods manufacturing concern an order for a rouple of cases, some thousands in number, of darning eggs to be supplied without handles and of a size somewhat smaller than the standard; and then for some reason this special lot of eggs was left on the manufacturer's hands. But they were not wasted.

In the course of time there came in a hatoin manufacturer who wanted to leave an order for a few thousand hatpin knobs, to be made in specified shape and dimensions Besides making regularly a great variety of things the turned goods makers also turn wood in any shape that may be required to

And then the salesman recalled that little lot of undersized handleless actly what the hatpin wanted and he took the lot. And so finally they came to be made up, not as darning eggs with fancy handles, but as the knobs of hatpins.

tion of being the least expensive countries in which to live, and this is ow ing not only to the price of foodstuffs, but also to the extreme care with which everything is used.

An example of this studied econ omy, which, in time, becomes second nature, is their use of bread. In both countries mentioned only enough bread is cut to provide the family with one piece each. Should any one else wish for bread, two pieces are cut, and this process is repeated until the meal is over.

By this method there is no bread jeft cut from the loaf to dry in the box and one baking lasts four full days, not two days and a half. Perhaps it sounds too economical: perhaps the generous hostess might think that it was not true American hospitality. Indeed, it is the best treatment for guests and family alike. for bread that stands but a short time in the dish is sure to be just little dry, while bread just cut is sweet and fresh.

It was a little driver by a word of four letters. After odd that she should break down and a drive of seven or eight blocks the vehicle stopped in front of a composite building of brick and stone. The stern-looking man motioned the younger one to get out and the two quickly followed. A few resounding knocks on the door brought out a man whose dangling suspenders, bare feet and mussed hair indicated a hurried evacuation of his bed. After a rapid scrutiny of his caller with his alert eye he ejaculated:

"Eddie Darrell! By the great Lord Harry! Where'd you catch him?" His curiosity was satisfied and, after a few laconic directions by the leader, the two returned to the carriage, leaving the younger man in charge of the keeper.

The man of the stern countenance was a United States detective. His companion was the cashier of the National bank. The young man they left

At the ensuing term of the United States court the young man pleaded guilty to embeszling the bank's money, which he said he had hoped to return if his wheat deals hadn't gone wrong There didn't appear to be any very mitigating circumstances, save that the prisoner was closely related to one of the best families of the town and had always borne an excellent repu tation. And he was young. His lawyers referred to this in their plea for mercy and stated that for seven years past the prisoner had been a trusted employe of the bank and the faithful treasurer of a leading church of which he was a member. The court spoke of the parable of the talents and made it five years at hard labor.

The assistant cashier donned stripes and began his long term of servitude. He was a model prisoner the warden said.

Soon after the convict reached the penitentiary a young woman sought employment at a hotel in the prison town. She was well-formed and fairly good-looking, but extremely reticent. She belonged to a class Hugo speaks of as "les miserables." It was noticed that she was frequently in the cook room after hours preparing dainties of some sort, which she took to her room On many occasions she was observed late at night, by the aid of a candle, sewing on material for a man's garments. It soon leaked out that she had a lover in the penitentiary, who was the recipient of these favors cre ated during the hours she should have been asleep. A metropolitan newspaper that makes a specialty of such cases sent an investigator to the penitentiary and he took his paint brush along. An extract from his report ran like this:

"With a love more lasting than that of Mercedes for Edmond Dantes and sidevotion as unselfish as Juliet's to you have deserted that young wom-Romeo, Nell Thorne waits outside the an?" grim walls of the state penitentiary for the release of her convict lover. When he walks through the great iron doors to the freedom of a scornful world he will find an arm ready to sustain him and a heart that sympathizes with him."

There were many paragraphs of that sort and pictures galore. It was a fine article and attracted attention. A round-faced old gentleman of a philanthropic turn visited the penitentiary to see if it all were true. He knew that reporters were sometimes given fired at a bird sitting on the roof of a to-er-imagination. But in this in shanty. In his old home town—the town where he had made his misstep-the glad hand was extended on every side. He was invited to social functions, attended his old church and was smilingly received by the young women. The prodigat had returned and all, in the goodness of their hearts, were bent on forgetting the mistake and encouraging him in his efforts to retrieve his reputation.

The ex-convict began to feel that he hadn't been so had after all and when the subject of his term in the pen was referred to be spoke bitterly of the "excessive punishment" given him But that was past now and he inier of the National Bank of Stanfield tended to buckle down and show the old father and mother and his many friends that he was worthy of their confidence. Then went to Ohio and reported for duty at the large establishment operated by his friend. In all his life he had never seen such magnificently apointed offices and he felt that he had reached a place where the surroundings were in consonance with his ambition. He was beginning to feel at home. The round-faced man met him with a bright smile and a glad hand, then took him affectionately by the arm and led him into his private office. There they chatted for a long while. The big man was delighted over the improved appearance of his young protege, and in a short time learned what he could do and assigned him to an important position. The salary was even up to the rather optimistic view entertained by Eddie himself. As he was leaving Mr. Trustwell nudged his new employe slyly in the side and said:

"By the way, where's our little girl Nell?"

Darrell laughed lightly.

"Oh, I didn't bring her along," he said. "I guess she's got another fellow by this time.'
