

The Best of Texas is Mrs. Best

BETWEEN US

by Janice Lee

Some day a tax return may contain only three questions:

- 1—How much money have you got?
- 2—Where is it?
- 3—How soon can you get it?

Friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Anderson (he of the Anderson Chevrolet Co., Ranger auto dealers) are receiving clever birth announcements from the couple on the recent arrival of their new baby daughter.

The front of the unusual announcement relative to the Andersons' "new model"—

ANNOUNCING THE STARTLINGLY NEW! WONDERFULLY DIFFERENT! NEW 1953

Inside the folder is the further explanation: "This new model is known as the 'Candace Jean Series' and rolled off the assembly line at 2:16 a.m., February 4, 1953.

"Specifications: Engine—2 lung Power. Wheelbase—22 inches. Weight—7 pounds, 10 ounces. Fuel consumption—One Bottle of Formula Every 3 Hours. Performance—Exceptional During the Middle of the night. Lubrication—Self-Lubricating. Muffler—None whatsoever.

"The new model is on display at the Bill Anderson residence."

In the cloak room of the Trinity Episcopal Church, Tulsa, Okla.: "Please do not leave hats or coats here unless attendants are on duty. These sometimes come into the church to prey."

Also in the vestibule of the All-Hallows Church in London, England: "Not everyone who enters this church is converted. You better watch your coat, handbag, etc."

We blush with shame— But we do make mistakes, folks—even though, obviously, we hate to admit it.

However, over the years past during which thousands of daily editions of The Ranger Times have been produced, we've frequently been embarrassed as a result of "boners in print." Mistakes—inevitable, perhaps, but unexplainable, and we sincerely assure you, completely unintentional mistakes—have appeared much to our chagrin and sad surprise.

Fortunately, though, we're glad we're able to hold a clear conscience. And all because we know our typographical "boners" were completely innocent—yes, just "slips that pass in the night"—errors which escaped usually sharp and probing eyes.

Most newspapers found some place for mistakes, both human and mechanical, which have slipped past them in a recent article in a national magazine entitled, "What Mistakes Do You Find?"

In his revealing and highly interesting bit of prose, Mollie Sontheimer, the author, tells the reason for "certain shreds"—meanings of words which all newspaper readers have encountered some time, and in the most unexpected places—and gives many examples of mistakes made in both editorial and composing rooms.

Most editorial errors result from careless writing, ambiguous phrasing or mind-wandering exchange of words such as once made a headline read "Farmer Attacked by Infatuated Bull," when "infatuated" was the correct and intended word.

Area Bankers Declare They'll Back Ranchers

Ranger Banker Attends Fifth District Meeting

W. F. Creager, vice-president of the Commercial State Bank, returned Friday from the Fifth District meeting of the Texas Bankers Association in Dallas and reported that the government won't have to step in and backstop the loans of Texas cattlemen.

The banks will be able—and willing—to carry the cattlemen, even though prices are around 30 per cent below the postwar peak, and even though high feed prices are making it tough for the stockmen to stay in the clear.

Mr. Creager and his wife were among the 1,400 other bankers and their wives who convened in Dallas Thursday for the session. They exuded confidence and prosperity. But they were conscious of falling farm prices.

Most of the Fifth District is in East Texas, and sprinkled among the bank officers from that area were many executives of Fort Worth and Dallas banks. They talked about a lot of things, but the one subject that got them hot was the proposal of Senator Monroney of Oklahoma that the Department of Agriculture should step in with a fund of $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 and guarantee loans against cattle, according to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Monroney's action was that a what with declining prices, stockmen are unable to hold cattle because banks are calling loans. You couldn't find a banker here Thursday who was even thinking of calling cattle loans.

"We don't loan on cattle alone; we make loans to people we know and people we're willing to carry," more than a dozen bankers said in almost identical terms.

They were equally agreed that the government telling them how to run their business; they think they can do better, even if they take a few chances, by running their own business.

The Fifth District's formal meeting was held Thursday morning. It featured an address by Fred F. Florence, president of Republic National Bank of Dallas, who pictured a glowing future for Texas cattlemen but warned his fellow bankers that caution in lending policies is needed. He suggested they maintain adequate reserves against the possibility that, sooner or later, business will enter a period of readjustment.

Florence said the immediate future promises good business in Texas. Oil is leading for expansion in a period of growing demand; chemicals are making steady progress, will need more capital but are in strong and capable hands that can command the requisite loans; manufacturing, although now vigorously competitive, is pushing ahead.

Caution Urged

Declining farm prices represent a weak spot which may be attributed to increased production, declining exports and prospects for production gains in importing countries, Florence said.

The decline must be viewed with caution and concern because of the impact of farm prosperity in the general economy, but farmers stand high in liquid assets and have ample credit, he said.

The meeting heard an analysis of current banking problems by Alf Morris, president of First National Bank of Wimsboro, who echoed Florence's admonition for caution.

County May Get Needed Rain Over Weekend Period

The rains didn't come. But the U. S. Weather Bureau, which had predicted badly-needed precipitation for the Eastland County area for Friday night in an earlier forecast, continued to give hope Saturday morning.

Occasional light rains were predicted for the area Saturday, the weather men said.

The Weather Bureau communication also forecast cooler weather for Saturday with the mercury scheduled to climb only around the one-to-two mark, 50-degree mark. And for Saturday night, the temperature was due to dip to near freezing—in the lower 30s.

Sunday, according to the weekend forecast, was due to be fair and clear and slightly warmer with the day's high for Sunday at 60 degrees predicted for the 60s.

For West Texas: Partly cloudy Saturday and Sunday. Occasional rain in Del Rio-Eagle Pass area Saturday—no important temperature changes.

Texas Electric Issues Warning To Kite Flyers

Texas Electric Service Company today appealed to parents to caution their children about flying kites near electric wires.

"The windy season brings kite flying time and this traditional sport is one that is lots of fun for children if it is done safely," A. N. Larson, Texas Electric Service Company manager, pointed out. "Many youngsters don't realize the dangers in the moment pastime if certain safety rules are not observed, the most important of which is to never fly kites where there is the possibility of them getting tangled in electric power lines."

Other dangerous practices in connection with kite flying include using metallic cord or wire for the kite string, making the kite frame of metal, flying kites in the rain when even a cotton kite string can become a dangerous conductor of electricity and trying to retrieve a kite in case it does get caught in electric wires, Mr. Larson stated.

"Local youngsters who fly kites have been careful and cooperative in the past and we've had no serious mishaps in several years, but each year, over the nation, there are many cases of injuries to kite flyers," Mr. Larson said. "If kites are made right and flown right, kite flying is an enjoyable, wholesome sport."

To further impress children that safety is all-important in kite flying, Texas Electric Service Company is providing posters for all school bulletin boards and announcements for school principals.

Rangers Rack Schreiner Five, 73-67, Friday

The 1953 Ranger Junior College Rangers sizzled on the hardwood of the Recreation Bldg. in downtown Ranger Friday night when they blazed out a 73-67 win over the Schreiner Institute Mountaineers in a Pioneer Conference roundball clash.

Coach Boone Yarbrough's spirited Ranger dominated play from start to finish. They were out front, 16-14, at the windup of the first fast quarter and held a 39-36 lead at halftime. They pulled ahead to a 56-48 advantage at the end of the third period, and hammered on through the fourth to hold command and sack up their second conference triumph.

Leading point-maker for the Purple & Whites was Frankie Massey of Burleson who hit the mesh for 27, highest individual total of the night, and Dave Anderson was next with 26. For the losing Mountaineers high scorer was McCann with 23 and Aston with 20.

Next Pioneer Conference scrap of the '53 Rangers is slated for Tuesday night at the Recreation Bldg. in Ranger when the Yarbrough crew hopes to upset the top quint of the loop—the red-hot Arlington State College Rebels.

The Rebs are undefeated in conference play with a string of three straight Pioneer Conference wins. They hold a 66-49 victory over the Rangers in a prior meeting of the two PC crews.

The RJCers have won two roundball clashes in six starts.

Prayer Is Topic For Sermon At Church of Christ

The sermon subject at the morning worship service at the church of Christ, 225 So. Rusk Street is "Prayer Through". What do people mean when they say "Let us pray it through" or "We will pray through"? Where did such an expression originate and why? Is the modern usage of such expression consistent with Bible teachings? Come and let us study together. Bible classes for all ages begin at 9:45 a.m., followed at 10:45 by the morning worship service. The young people meet at 6:30 p.m. This is followed at 7:30 by the regular Sunday evening worship service.

The men's training class and business meeting meets at 7:30 Monday evening. The ladies Bible class meets at 2:00 p.m. Wednesday, followed at 7:30 p.m. with the mid-week service of songs, prayer and Bible classes for all. Although good attendance is had at each of these assemblies, numbers present alone is not counted for strength; and although contributions to this work by the members will be sufficient to its every need; Bible precept, example, or clear and necessary inference will not be sacrificed to gain either, however desirable their increase may be.

You are invited to be present and enjoy the friendship and sincere interest that will be shown you in these services. C. R. Mansfield, the local evangelist, will preach at both services on Sunday.

Infestation of southern root worm and other insects which have become a major problem for peanut growers.

T. C. Cozart and Herman Schaeffer made short talks on the "leadership" program held recently in Abilene.

Fam Kimble, president of the Southwest Ranchers Association, highlighted the activities of this comparatively new organization. President Myrick also recognized B. J. Gie, of Abilene District 7, who in turn introduced State Director Loys D. Barbour of Iowa Park, as guest speaker.

Barbour in his opening remarks defined the Farm Bureau as an organization whose governing factors are formulated at county levels. He cited the growth of the organization from one small group in one county in 1911, up to 1919, when the several states chartered the American Farm Bureau Association. This tremendous expansion extends to 48 states and Puerto Rico.

He named equality as the fundamental principle to the healthy economy, and cites many instances in which the Farm Bureau is actively interested. Namely stabilization of prices, foreign relations, health program, soil and water conservation, taxation and many others.

Barbour also stated that as an agricultural people "we must get away from personalities and adhere to principles" to be able to cope with legislative measures. He pointed out some of the intricacies of House bills being assigned to committees, by the speaker, and the near impossibility of referring to other committees.

House bill No. 3, was discussed but for lack of time and space we can not dwell upon this portion of the speech.

This years session of the Texas Legislature has been an exceptionally quiet one, Barbour concluded.

Other visitors present were President and Mrs. W. G. Kiker and a group from DeWitt county; President Fisher and Don Cheater, Service Agent and a Comanche delegation, along with Taylor representatives.

Kenneth Mayhall and his Gspelaires entertained the assembly with a number of their hymns and spirituals.

Approximately 100 persons attended.

The Peacock Path

THE STORY: Jim Orth, private detective, posing as a guest at Windsor, knows that the killer of Ames Warburton failed in three other attempts to take human lives. Two of these attempts were made on Marney Cravath, Orth's client and owner of the estate where Warburton, Cravath's junior partner, was killed. Another attempt was made on Dolly Dumont, wife of Cravath's second partner, Jack Dumont. So far, Warburton's death is on record as an accidental fall off Peacock Path to the rocky beach of Long Island Sound. But Dolly, Cravath's niece, wants Orth to persuade her father to tell the police everything.

XVII

THERE was an inquest on Ames Warburton at 10 o'clock the next morning. The affair was so brief and so smoothly conducted that it almost looked as if the coroner's jury had been rigged. On the way home I learned from Cravath that a cousin of Ames was on his way from New Hampshire to claim the body and take it away. Ames's mother had been widowed, as I knew, and this cousin was acting for her.

That seemed to dispose, finally and a little pitifully, of brilliant young Ames Warburton. It seemed almost as if we were brushing poor Ames off—Cravath myself, the whole bunch of us. Yet, with specific reference to the Warburton case, what had we had to do on? Mrs. Ring's suppositions and nothing else.

When we reached the house I went upstairs with Cravath and Dumont to find out how matters stood. Nurse Burroughs met us outside the Dumont's door. The doctor was with Dolly now, she said. He was well satisfied with her progress. But, she thought, no one would be permitted to see Mrs. Dumont until much later in the day.

So, with nothing special to do for the moment, I went for a walk. It took me in the direction of the garage. Big Williamson, the chauffeur was just outside of that, doing a wash job on a super-speed sedan.

He halted me. "How's Mrs. Dumont today?" he asked.

Better, I told him. And added, "By the way, how did you happen to discover her?"

He dipped a sponge into a pail of ink water, squeezed it into a semblance of dryness. "I was just taking a walk after my supper," he said finally. "Loafing around, like. And I come across her. Honest, you could have knocked me over with a straw."

There was nothing specifically wrong with the statement. And yet, it seemed to me, Williamson kept his eyes averted and sponged the car more assiduously than he had been doing when I'd first strolled up.

"You thought she was dead?" I asked.

"I sure did. I never seen nobody look deader. So I didn't touch her or nothing. I just beat it up to the house and sent Manila for Mr. Cravath."

I said, conversationally: "She got a nasty crack on the back of her head. I've been trying to figure out what gave her that. Didn't see anything like a stick or a stone lying around out there, did you?"

He straightened up, looked me full in the eye then. "No, sir, I didn't see nothing. But it was kinda dark and . . . well, I was flustered all of a sudden. Didn't really think to look for anything, about that time."

THAT afternoon Dr. Dreeves came again. He went straight up to Dolly Dumont's room and a few minutes later Marney Cravath sought me out.

"Dreeves will let us talk to her for a few minutes," he announced. "Better come along."

It was a sobered and wan-looking Dolly who smiled at us feebly from a pile of big soft pillows. She wore a neat white bandage around her head and her hair was a dull-brown now, the rain having washed and beaten most of the henna out of it. No mocking little lights lurked in her green eyes.

Dumont and the doctor were with her. Dumont's eyes flickered over me questioningly. No doubt he wondered, and with reason, why Cravath had dragged me along.

"Now this has got to be brief," Dreeves had his watch out. "I'll give you 10 minutes. No more."

Dolly shook her head, cautiously, infinitesimally. "Might as well make it five, Doctor." Her voice barely reached the strength of a whisper. "Because I haven't much to tell."

I HEARD Jack Dumont's breath expelled in a kind of disappointed sigh. I felt like making the same sound. All of us, though perhaps we hadn't exactly banked on it, had been hoping for a clarifying story from Dolly.

"You mean," Cravath drew a chair to the bedside, "that you can't remember anything? You must have some sort of recollection."

"As if I haven't tried! I've been beating what little brain I've got. But it's no use. I just pulled a complete blank yesterday. Some time in the afternoon."

"Do you remember where you were when you—ah, pulled the blank?"

"Yes. I know that much. Right here in this room. I'd been talking to Eve downstairs, but all of a sudden I felt headachy. So I came up, took two aspirins and started to lie down. I . . ." She checked it.

A little later, however. From across the room Dumont said, his voice slightly sharp. "Started, Dolly?"

"That's what I said." Her smile became rather rueful. "I . . . You all know it already, so what's the use of stalling? I was very very drunk yesterday. I'm sorry, but there it is. And after I'd taken the aspirins, I decided to have just one more. And it must have hit me. Because I don't remember another thing."

NEWSPAPERS Led All Advertising Mediums in Producing Sales For the Advertiser

Every year a nationwide survey is conducted to determine what advertising medium influences men and women the most in buying merchandise or services. Figures on the latest survey, just released, place newspapers again way out front. In fact, no other medium came even close to the widespread advertising prestige and power of the press. The survey again proved that men and women buy newspapers and read them thoroughly. It's a receptive, solid audience—tuned daily to the hometown newspaper. Radio and TV audiences are becoming more divided and split each day. But the audiences of the hometown daily is a complete unit that can be counted on day in and day out. This simple test proves our story: Contact ten families listed in your telephone directory. Ask them (1) What radio station are you listening to? (2) What TV station are you tuned to? (3) Do you read the Ranger Daily Times? Prove to yourself that newspaper advertising is the most effective and the most economical medium of all!

ment on the profit side of the ledger in 1953. The sharp drop in cattle prices since last summer was made more acute by the drought which covered much of the country. Recent rains, however, have improved the prospects for feed and some strength has been noted in livestock prices.

The prospects for 1953 are not too bright, says C. H. Bates, farm management specialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. This prediction is based on the forecast that more beef and poultry will be available. The supplies of mutton and pork will be less but the over-all total of all meats is expected to be larger than 1952 supplies. Prices, says Bates, for both live animals and meat at retail are most likely to decline some unless unforeseen changes occur.

On the favorable side of the picture Bates adds that the strong demand for meat is likely to conwith which to buy meats and other foods.

The long time outlook for profits from livestock production believes the specialist depends on how well producers balance livestock numbers with feed supplies. He points out that Texas producers in 1952 had some 21 per cent more cattle than 10 years ago and this resulted in heavier stocking of range and pasture land. The drought coupled with the 20 per cent less acreage planted last year to hay and silage crops made the feed situation a tough one. Even with normal yields there would have been feed shortages in most areas.

The use of fertilizers and irrigation in some sections has helped to boost feed crop yields, but Bates cautions that growers must keep feed acreages in line with livestock numbers.

Profitable livestock production in 1953 or for most any year, he says, depends on the plans that are made by the individual producer. For an adequate feed supply which most producers lack, unless there is a stable feed supply, livestock profits are doubtful, regardless of a strong demand for meat and reasonable prices.

When the operator lightly depresses one of these keys, a brass mold of the corresponding letter is released to become one character in a full line of type. Strike the wrong key without detection and an error results.

Because a line must be set full to avoid the release of uncontrolled molten metal, all operators when an error is made in the assembling of a line, will fill out the line by running a finger down the first two vertical lines of keys on the keyboard, resulting in the letter grouping of "ctain shrdlu"—always intending to discard the line when cast and delivered by the linotype, but all too frequently forgetting to throw the "pi" line away.

Entirely aside from human frailties, the linotype machine itself, if not functioning at full efficiency, can create some amazing distortions. It can substitute a letter, add a letter, drop a letter or transpose a letter, changing the entire meaning of the word.

Recently a Texas newspaper in a two-column headline announcing the appointment of a prominent man to the State Soil Conservation Board a transposition of letters turned "conservation" into "conseruation," an error luckily detected after the paper was in the press, and after only a few copies had been printed.

So despite every effort to eliminate them, we will continue to expect—and fear—errors, both human and mechanical, to make their appearance in this newspaper. And so, in spite of double proofreading of this very story, we wouldn't bet even a counterfeit copper that you won't find an error in it!

THE STORY: Jim Orth, private detective, posing as a guest at Windover, home of the wealthy stockbroker Marney Cravath, wonders if he is dealing with a "clever" murderer. Two attempts have been made on Cravath's life, both unsuccessful. These were followed by the successful attempt to murder Ames Warburton, Cravath's partner, and then another failure in an attempt to murder Dolly Dumont, wife of Jack Dumont, Cravath's other partner. Three failures in four tries looks to Orth like a lot of bungling. Clever killers do not miss their mark at least not more than once.

XVI

SUPPOSE—wild idea—but suppose the intellect, or intelligence, pitted against us were well, subhuman. It seemed inconceivable, fantastic. Ames Warburton, however, if Ring's eyes hadn't played her tricks, pushed or flung violently over the cliffs by something so dark and swift as to remain unseen. In other words, could it be that we were fighting not a person, but a thing? And did this great Long Island estate—lush, green and innocuous in broad daylight—harbor something inhuman and hellish that came by darkness to haunt the Peacock Path?

Just there I stiffened suddenly. Two soft but imperious raps had sounded at the door.

I slipped quietly off the bed, opened the door a crack. All my vague imaginations, I guess, had me jittery.

Sally Cravath stood there, in something dark-blue and clingy. "Open it wider, you dope," she whispered. "What do you think I am, an eel?"

I obeyed mechanically with, I presume, my mouth open.

Sally said, smiling faintly: "Jim, please stop ogling me. And try and keep the wifelight out of your eyes. I had to come for—for help."

I dropped the offensive eyes. "I should think," I said, "that any girl belonging to a plush establishment like this could afford a pair of mules."

Sally extended a bare foot. She blinked, as if surprised to find that she owned it. "Oh, I must have kicked them off in Uncle Marney's room. And forgot them when I . . . well, bounced out!"

"You've been bouncing!" I said politely.

SHE perched on the bed, drew her knees up, rested a small chin between them. "Don't be so humorous. But I think you'd call it that. Anyway, I left that stubborn obstinate, pigheaded character in a hurry."

I saw then that she was indeed agitated. There was a trace of a flush beneath the tan-and-coral of her cheeks and her voice shook slightly.

"Take it easy," I said. "Look, Jim," she said. "I've been in there begging him to go to the police. It's obvious to me—and I know darn well to you too—that we should have called them hours ago. Will you please tell me what he's waiting for after this thing happening to Dolly? A bigger and better murder, maybe?"

"We haven't established one murder yet."

"Oh, nuts. Let's not kid ourselves. Ames was killed and Dolly half-killed. And before that someone tried to get Uncle Marney." She looked at me steadily, shadows in her big gray eyes. "And anybody who thinks the whole thing is just a series of coincidences ought to have his head read."

Personally, I agreed with her. And I began wondering a touch disturbedly, about Marston Cravath. Up to a certain point, protecting the family escutcheon against notoriety was laudable. But beyond that point it became plain stupidity. Unless . . . unless Cravath had a more cogent reason for keeping the law out of this.

"Eww," I inquired, "was it left with your uncle?"

Sally's lips thinned to a firm red line. "I issued an ultimatum. I've given him tonight to think it over. Then, if he doesn't come to his senses, I'm calling the police myself."

"What did he say?"

"What didn't he say?" She gave me a very smile. "And he said it all with his top blown. He bawled me out for 10 minutes straight and never stopped for breath."

"Listen," I said, "you picked a bad night for ultimatums, that's all. Your uncle's upset and I don't blame him. It was pretty rugged out there, with Mrs. Dumont."

"Oh!" Her voice hardened. "My uncle's upset, is he? Well, what about Ames . . . and Dolly? Himself too, for that matter?"

"Okay," I said soothingly. "But where do I come in?"

She hugged her knees. "I'd like it if you went to Uncle Marney in the morning, when he's cooled off, and tried to knock some sense into his head. After all, Jim, it's up to him to call the police. He's the head of this house. It's going to look very funny to the police and—everybody else, if his niece has to send for them."

I AROSE then, stood facing her. There was, between us, about two feet of floor space. "Okay, I'll probably cost me my job, but I'll make your uncle a few polite suggestions."

Sally let a moment pass. Then, quite softly. "Did anybody ever tell you, Jim Orth, that you're a very nice guy?"

"Forget it," I said, catching hold of myself. "And go to bed."

Her face, a kind of lovely mask, was tilted toward me. Her lips were red, slightly parted. I lost head. I burned up that two feet of floor space. Then, blue flowing thing and all, she was in my arms. For a moment, operations in the universe were suspended.

An awfully short moment, though. She pushed me away, gently. The slap she gave my forehead wasn't so gentle, it smarted.

"Now you," she said, "forget that!" And she was gone.

Chaplain Massengee To Deliver Final Sermon Sunday In Ranger

On Sunday evening, Chaplain Jasper Massengee will preach his final sermon before reporting for overseas duty with the armed forces in Korea. He will deliver this sermon from the pulpit of the First Methodist Church, where many of his friends attend regularly. Before entering the Chaplaincy, Brother Massengee was the popular pastor of the 2nd Baptist Church of this city. His host of friends are not only numbered among the Baptists in Ranger, but also among members of all other churches. Since this is his last public appearance in a pulpit in Ranger before reporting for overseas duty, he issues a cordial invitation to his friends to hear him. "Our attendance at this last preaching service will be our way of expressing love and appreciation for the unselfish service that he rendered in this community," stated the pastor of the local church.

Jasper Massengee

general Superintendent. Following the brief devotional in the general assembly, the various classes will meet for Bible study with capable teachers for each class. The Children's Division meets in the church basement where there is a class and efficient workers for each age group.

The pastor will bring the message, using for his subject: "Fruitful Frustrations," based upon one of Paul's disappointments, disrupted plans, and unrealized dreams.

Hens Lay More Eggs With New Ration Mixture

The legendary hen that laid golden eggs may be just a piker when compared with the laying hens of tomorrow.

A high efficiency ration for laying hens that produces more eggs from less feed has been produced by scientists of the poultry department at the University of Connecticut.

The net cost of producing a dozen eggs is considerably less than on standard rations, the tests showed. The new ration uses ground yellow corn and 20 grams of niacin per ton in place of ground oats and one-half of the standard wheat middings found in standard rations. The new feed is slightly more expensive per ton, but this is more than offset by the efficiency of the high energy ration.

Christian Science Lesson-Sermon

The Lesson - Sermon entitled "Soul" to be read in Christian Science churches on Sunday will emphasize the thought that as mankind turns away from the unsettling, fluctuating results of today's turbulent living, and seeks succor in God, they find that God is maintaining and sustaining all His children in peace and harmony.

That mankind must look to God for this blessing is stressed in the Golden Text, "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning" (Psalm 130:6).

From the Bible will be read this verse: "For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations" (Isaiah 61:11).

This exhortative passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, will also be read: "We cannot deny that Life is self-sustained, and we should never deny the everlasting harmony of Soul, simply because, to the mortal senses, there is seeming discord. . . Truth will at length compel us all to exchange the pleasures and pains of sense for the joys of Soul" (page 396).

Rev. Mike Pattison, pastor of the Methodist Church of Gordon, who spoke on "Life is a ship." Rev. Pattison stressed three essentials: the Bible as a Chart, prayer as a Compass and Jesus Christ as the Captain. Rev. Lavender gave the benediction.

The following committees functioned: Decorating and Dining room, Misses Hopper, A. W. Branch, A. W. Dooly, Mena and Kitchen, Misses Lavender, Tom Stewart, Arthur Deffenbach, S. M. McAnelly and C. S. Entler.

Local Schools Now Paying About 40 Per Cent Of Cost Of Public Education; State Should Assist

Charles H. Tennyson, executive secretary of the Texas State Teachers Association, said today at Austin, that plans for easing the critical classroom shortage will be seriously handicapped if local school districts are required to pay a bigger share of the minimum foundation program.

"Local schools already are paying more than 40 per cent of the cost of public education in Texas," Tennyson said, "although those who want to rearrange the school financing patterns cite only the figures showing that local schools pay about 20 per cent of the minimum foundation program cost. They fail to cite the cost of current operations and repayment of bonded indebtedness."

The big difference in percentage lies in the fact that the minimum foundation program does not represent total school costs. Local school districts must pay many additional expenses themselves, including the cost of new buildings and facilities.

Figures compiled by the Texas Education Agency show that the total cost of public education in Texas during the 1951-52 school year was $318,943,078. Tennyson said. Local school districts paid $132,832,708 of that amount, or 41.6 per cent. The state paid $180,918,607 or 56.7 per cent. The federal government contributed 1.7 per cent, or $5,211,713, mostly for the school lunch program.

"Approximately 33,000 children in our elementary schools must attend classes for less than a full day because of the classroom shortage," Tennyson said. "Our local school districts are putting as much money as is feasible into new buildings. Many plans for new school construction may have to be scrapped if local contributions to the minimum foundation fund are increased."

The limit on local contributions to that fund now stands at $45,000,000.

"Many other states grant financial aid to local schools for construction purposes," Tennyson said, "but in Texas the need for buildings and facilities must be met by the local communities themselves."

"Many of the other states help pay school construction costs," Tennyson said. "In recent years, Virginia set aside $45,000,000 for that purpose while Washington appropriated $40,000,000, North Carolina $25,000,000 and Delaware $13,000,000. California recently made available, in two separate moves, $55,000,000 and $70,000,000 to help local school districts meet building costs, in addition to $250,000,000 earmarked for a long-range building program. Massachusetts pays up to 65 per cent of the construction costs for school buildings."

Aid Not Asked

The local school districts in Texas have made no plea for similar grants, Tennyson pointed out. On their own initiative, they are doing their best to alleviate the critical classroom shortage which forces

Sports Fishing To Be Improved

The Chief Aquatic Biologist of the Game and Fish Commission said a sports fishing program utilizing Dingell-Johnson funds has been outlined. He said final authorization will hinge on Washington action.

Under the Dingell-Johnson fund, derived from taxing sports fishing equipment, fishing improvement projects are financed on the basis of three-fourths aid from the Federal agency and one fourth from the state. The first year's operation of the tax yielded Texas $109,380.22.

The Chief Aquatic Biologist listed these projects as under consideration:

Cutting passes in Caddo Lake to restore circulation of water since some of the lake's best fishing areas have become stagnant.

Removing water hyacinths from Lake Corpus Christi, parts of which have become almost inaccessible to anglers.

Building levees in Sheldon Reservoir near Houston to provide sports fishing in that area which also is being developed, through Pittman-Robertson funds, as a water fowl sanctuary.

Renovating Woodlawn Lake in San Antonio to eliminate poor fish population and noxious weed growth, in an overall move for better angling.

Expanding rough fish control in several Texas lakes.

Advancing management work and investigations in the Fort Worth area under a program designed particularly to improve Grapevine and Benbrook lakes.

Restoring fish life in the Guadalupe River in Gonzales County and other counties desiring such work.

The Chief Aquatic Biologist emphasized that this is only a partial list of projects.

He said studies are underway to use some of the funds to purchase access lands to waters in several parts of the state that are now closed to the public.
