What do you suppose is the cause of this state of affairs? There is something wrong somewhere. A writer in the News not long since said it was because the farmer lacked the facilities in the country for social enjoyment. The good brother is badly mistaken except in a few instances. The reason that so many country people want to quit the country and flock to the towns to live, is that in our National legislation the business interest of the country is in the hands of and is controlled by the combines and trust. I guess they are about as grand a set of robbers as ever cursed any country. They are robbing the farming class more than anyother, and consequently the farmer has to do more drudgery and hard work for the money that he gets than any other class. The farmer is the most deserving class in any country because they are the wealth producers of the country. If it were not for the farmer, town folks and all the rest would soon starve out and yet the farmer is but little better than a beast of burden for these corporations, combines and trusts of every kind. 1. It. baker, proprietor of the flome Bakery, Amarillo, made a test of the Elk Horn Flour, manufactured by the Eagle Milling Co., of this city and obtained the following results.

"I obtained the best results with this flour than with any other I have ever tried. Out of 25 pounds of flour I got 48 pounds of dough. This is an exceptional test, being much higher than any other flour on the market.

"I am thoroughly convinced that when this flour is used in large quantities the same result will be obtained. I have used many car loads of every high grade flour manufactured west of the Mississippi river and this test was far superior to any of these leading brands of flour.

"As to the quality of the bread, I am convinced that it is as good as any flour can make. I use bread from this flour at my own home, and am highly pleased with the quality."

The Phantom Wagon Train

By SALLY MENDAM Copyright by American Press Asso

ed from the western plains I joined a hunting party to get a last crack at this noble game. We took the old freighting road from St. Joseph, Mo., to Denver, on which many a wagon train had passed before the completion of the Union Pacific road as far as Laramie enabled merchants to transport their goods by a much more advantageous route. We had been out but a few days when an old plainsman wandered into our camp. He was the ghostliest chap I ever saw. He looked to be very old-how old we could not tell-and yet he didn't seem to have any home. So far as we could judge, he was an inhabitant of the plains, sometimes living with white men, nometimes with Indians.

One night after the others had turned in I was before my tent sitting I heard the creaking of a wagon. It was bright moonlight, and I saw toward the east what appeared to be an on drawn by four horses coming toward us. We were a quarter of u mile from the road on which it was moving-the old St. Joseph and Denver freighting road-so that we got only a distant view of the team.

"I didn't know," I said to the plainsman, "that wagons pass over this road since the railroad has been finished." "They don't; that's the phantom

I laughed incredulously.

"Ef you'd like to hear the story," he replied, "I'll tell you. But you won't believe it nohow."

The wagon lumbered along westward and disappeared. The old plainsman told me the yarn. "One mornin' about twenty years ago a spick and span wagon with a new canvas cover drawn by four shiny horses was ferried across the Missouri river from St. Joe and struck out for Denver. Inside was a family of emigrants. Jim Ringler, the husband and father, drove, while the mother and four children were inside. They were goin' out to make a home in some of western world was divided. There wasn't anything about the emigrant, that wasn't prosperous looking. He and bear it or aphad sold out his business and put the money into this outfit.

'Six months from that I met Bingler movin' south of Colorado Springs. His family didn't look so comfortable, a good deal of the paint was wore off his wagon, and his horses were lean. yours you would He said he'd been disappointed in findin' a good place to settle. He'd tried the plains and the mountains. The plains was too low and the mountains was too high. He was lookin' for somethin' intermediate. I recommended the foothills, and he said he'd try

"Purty nigh a year passed, and I met the Ringler family ag'in in Utah There wasn't one of 'em that didn't look like a skeleton, there wasn't a bit of paint on the wagon, two of the horses had died, and the other two was skin and bone. He said he was still lookin' for a place to settle, but hadn't found anything to suit him.

"The last time I ever seen Ringler's outfit was after another year had passed. It was on this road. The family had just been murdered by a party of Indians. The wagon was turned upside down, the Indians had taken the horses, and the bodies of Jim Ringler. his wife and children were layin' beside the road scalped. I've seen 'em a good many times since, always on the old St. Joe and Denver road headin' westward. I've often tried to git near enough to 'em to see of they was spick and span like they was when they started or with the spokes rattlin' from bein' dried out as they was when the Indians got 'em."

There was something about the creaking of the disappearing wagon. the story and the old plainsman to make me shudder. As for a real wagon passing over that deserted thoroughfare that had been abahaoned for the railroad, it did not seem possible that any emigrant or freighter wouldtake a route so dangerous and so expensive. Yet I could hear the wagon rattle, and, catching a faint view of it in the moonlight, I saw that it was a veritable schooner of the olden time. Without a word I said good night to the man who had told me the story and turned in.

In the morning the old fellow was not in camp. He had gone without leave as he had come without invi-

That day we met some plains peo ple. I told them about our visitor and the story he narrated. They had evidently heard the story before and seemed to believe in its ghostly attributes, for they stood listening to it in a sort of fright. When I had finished they asked me to describe the man who had told it.

"He was tall and thin, with a white beard and hair, a hook nose, not a tooth in his head and glittering eyes sunk deep in their sockets. He might be any age from seventy to a hundred. There was a scar of a terrible gash he had received right across his healthy, would believe if I told her. In the story everything is lovely after the storm; matrimony is like drifting forever down a babbling stream in a birch bark canoe whose sides rub the violets as they pass close to shore. There isn't a cloud in the sky as large as a blotch of ink. Agapemone is everywhere-love, love, love!

Awake, my dear; the novelist is dealing in lemons. From time immemorial he has been a great fruiter in this commodity, and his wares have so deceived and befuddled the young miss who is standing where the brook and river meet that she loses sight of practical things and plunges head first into the maeistrom of matrimony. When she awakens to the real situation she sobs out her disappointment

"Come on up tonight," she chortled; "that's near enough."

Do not be like this girl, for when one goes into the business of matrimony it is as necessary to have a capital stock as when one goes into the purchase and sale of groceries.

Wait for a good partner, a clean partner, a smart partner, and if he doesn't come do not be disappointed. It is better to be a bachelor maid than a grass widow.
