SWEET SORGHUM---WHEAT

The following is the twelfth (the right depth) gave a yield of of a series of articles on farming 38 1-3 bushels per acre. After on the Plains of Texas, written paying for the cost of preparaby H. M. Bainer, Agricultural tion, there was left $25.74, per Demonstrator for the Santa Fe: acre.

SWEET SORGHUMS.

The sweet sorghums belong to the same general family as kaffir, milo maize and broom 'corn. They are equally drouth resistant and require about the same handling. In this section they may be grown for the syrup, for seed or for forage. The seed of these crops is not valuable as a feed. In many sections the seed is raised for seed purposes and is sold as a commercial product.

For seed purposes this crop should be handled almost exactly as kaffir or milo maize.

For forage purposes, the ground should be prepared as described under "Better Tillage Methods." The seed should be planted with a press drill at the rate of from 40 pounds to one bushel per acre. The sweet sorghums will not do well until after the ground becomes thoroughly warm. They should therefore not be planted until some time after kaffir planting time. For forage purposes, sorghum should be cut before it gets overly ripe.

Varities: There are two common varieties of sweet sorghums that will do well here, the sumac and amber.

The sumac sorghum is a late growing, heavy producing variety, it is very sweet and makes excellent forage.

The amber is an early variety and stands a great deal of dry weather. It is not a heavy forage yielder, but a good seed producer. On account of its early

Land plowed July 15th, three inches deep, (plowed at the right time but too shallow) produced 33 1-3 bushels per acre, a net return of $22.32.

Land plowed August 15th, seven inches deep, not worked until September 15th, showed a yield of 23 2-8 bushels per acre and a net return of $15.34, per acre, after deducting the cost of preparation.

Land plowed at proper depth, seven inches, September 15th (too late) produced 15 3-4 bushels per acre and gave a net return of $9.08 per acre. Land plowed three inches deep (too shallow) September 15 (too late) gave a yield of 141-2 bushels, a net return of $8.52 per acre, after deducting cost of preparation.

Land disced but not plowed, cost $1.95 per acre for preparation and produced 41-4 bushels per acre, the crop when sold returned $1.47 per acre over the cost of preparation of ground. A careful examination of the above statements will show an increase in wheat yield from

41-4 bushels to 381-3 bushels per acre, due wholly to differ. ences in methods of preparing the land before seeding. The difference actually being 34 bushels per acre. Seed and Seeding: If the seed has been thoroughly cleaned and is of a good variety, 30 pounds or one half bushel is enough per acre. If the seed is sowed late, after November 1st, a little more will be needed.

maturing qualities, it is adapted to many sections.

Either the sumac or amber sorghums are good seed producers, and often make good cash crops, if grown for the seed only. The sweet sorghums make good sod crops. When grown for seed purposes, these crops often produce large enough net returns in one year to pay for the land on which they grew. Danger in Pasturing: Cattle often die as a result of sorghum poisoning. There are four stages of conditions that often develop in a sorghum field that are likely to kill cattle, if pastured: (1) When it is very young; (2) when stunted by dry weather; (3) second growth crop, and (4) frosted sorghum. Kaffir under similar conditions is also dangerous. No treatment that will cure s known excepting not to pasture under conditions named. Even if there was a remedy for the poison, there would not be enough time to use it before death would take place. The poison developed is nothing more than the deadly poison. prussic acid. WHEAT.

Winter Wheat: Winter wheat will be a success in the Panhanrolling. dle and South Plains only when our farmers learn to thoroughly prepare the seed bed early and deep. While wheat is a crop that requires a firm seed bed, it will not do well in ground that has not been plowed or pulverzed in some way. The seed bed should either be prepared by "Summer Tillage" or as described under "Summer Plowing" in "Better Tillage Methods"' The longer before sowing time that the ground is prepared, the better.

Results of Tillage Methods: The following data on results of tillage methods on wheat in 1911, on the Kansas Agricultural Experimental farm, as quoted in to our conditions.

Land plowed July 15th (the your money will be waiting for ight time) seven inches deep you.

Winter wheat should be sowed between September 20th and November 1st, however, good results come from later sowing. Sow with a press drill. Treat all seed for smut as described elsewhere in this bulletin. Turkey Red and Kharkof varieties are best for winter seeding in this section.

Spring Wheat: Spring wheat does well in this section if the ground is well prepared. The ground should be plowed early and deep. It is often not advisable to plow at all just before sowing, unless the ground can be thoroughly packed. Spring wheat will require slightly more seed than fall sowing, from three pecks to one bushel. Treat the seed for smut. Durum or Macaroni varieties are the most certain for spring sowing. Sow as early as the weather conditions will permit. Harrowing Wheat: Both winter and spring wheat should be harrowed unless there is too much danger of blowing. Wheat that has been damaged by the effects of freezing and thawing should be rolled, preferably with a corrugated roller. If a smooth roller is used, the ground should be harrowed lightly immediately after the

"I hardly think so; at least, not for the present. I am not blood-thirsty, or enamored of man-hunting, but I happen to have a personal interest in this particular affair which I should prefer to settle alone." He paused, swiftly reviewing the circumstances of their short acquaintance, and as suddenly determined to trust her discretion. Deep down in his heart he rather wanted her to know. "The fact of the matter is, that Nob and I here were the ones that particular posse were trailing."

"You!" her voice faltered. "He said those men were under arrest for murder, and had broken jail."

"He also said it was easy to convict men in this country if you only knew how. It is true we broke jail, but only in order to save our lives; it was the only way. Technically, we are outlaws, and now run the risk of immediate re-arrest by returning north of the Arkansas. We came to you 'fugitives; I was charged with murder, the negro with assault. So, you see, Miss Hope, the desperate class of men you are now associating with."

The slight bitterness in his tone stung the girl into resentment. She was looking straight at him, but in the gloom he could not discern the expression of her eyes.

"I don't believe it," she exclaimed decisively, "you-you do not look like that!"

"My appearance may be sufficient to convince you," he returned, rather dryly. "but would weigh little before a Western court. Unfortunately, the evidence was strong against me; or would have been had the case ever come to a trial. The strange thing about it was that both warrants were sworn out by the same complainant, and apparently for a similar purpose-"Black Bart' Hawley."

"What purpose?" "To keep us from telling what we

It was not a face to be easily associated with frontier concert halls, or any surrender to evil; the chin round and firm, the lips full, yet sufficiently compressed; the whole expression that of pure and dignified womanhood. She puzzled him, and he scarcely knew what to believe, or exactly how to act toward her. "Our friends back yonder should be turning out from the corral by now," he said finally, anxious to break the silence, for she had not spoken since he ended his tale. "It will not be long until they discover Hawley's predicament, and perhaps the welkin already rings with profanity. That may even account for the blue haze out yonder."

She turned her eyes toward him. and the slightest trace of a smile appeared from out of the depths of their weariness.

"If they would only remain satisfied with that. Will they follow us, do you think? And are we far enough away by this time to be safe?"

"It is hardly likely they will let us escape without a chase." he answered slowly. "We possess too much information now that we have their rendezvous located, and 'Black Bart' will have a private grudge to revenge. I wonder if he suspects who attacked him! But don't worry, Miss Hope; we have miles the start, and the wind has been strong enough to cover our trail. Do you see that dark irregularity ahead?"

"Yes; is it a cloud?"

"No; the Arkansas sand dunes. I am going to try to keep the horses moving until we arrive there. Then we will halt and eat whatever Neb has packed behind him, and rest for an hour or two. You look very tired, but I hope you can keep up for that distance. We shall be safely out of sight then."

that happened last night, have tried through.'

Her voice proved her weakness, although it was determined enough, and Keith, yielding to sudden impulse, put out his hand, and permitted it to rest upon hers, clasped across the pommel. Her eyes drooped, but there was no change of posture.

"Your nerve is all right," he said, admiringly, "you have shown yourself a brave girl."

"I could not be a coward, and be my father's daughter," she replied, with an odd accent of pride in her choking voice, "but I have been afraid, and-and I am still." "Of what? Surely, not that those fellows will ever catch up with us?" "No, I hardly know what, only there is a dread I cannot seem to shake off, as if some evil impended, the coming of which I can feel, but not see. Have you ever experienced any such premonition ?" He laughed, withdrawing his hand. "I think not. I am far too prosaic a mortal to allow dreams to worry me. So far I have discovered sufficient trouble in real life to keep my brain active. Even now I cannot forget how hungry I am." She did not answer, comprehending how useless it would be to explain. and a little ashamed of her own illdefined fears, and thus they rode on in silence. He did not notice that she glanced aside at him shyly, marking the outline of his clear-cut features. It was a manly face, strong, alive, full of character, the well-shaped head firmly poised, the broad shoulders squared in spite of the long night of weary exertion. The depths of her eyes brightened with appreciation. "I believe your story, Mr. Keith," she said at last softly. "My story?" questioningly, and turning instantly toward her.

must wait until they reached the river | fever heat. to quench their thirst. Yet this was very far off now, and Keith had seen enough of their surroundings to locate the position of the ford. Slow as they must proceed, three hours more would surely bring them to the bank of the stream. They discussed their plans briefly as the three sat together on the warm sand, revived both by the food and the brief rest. There was not a great deal to be determined, only where the girl should be left, and how the two men had better proceed to escape observation.

Fort Larned was the nearest and safest place for their charge, none of the party expressing any desire to adventure themselves within the immediate neighborhood of Carson City. What her future plans might be were not revealed, and Keith forebore any direct questioning. His duty plainly ended with placing her in a safe environment, and he felt convinced that Mrs. Murphy, of the Occidental Hotel, would furnish room, and, if necessary, companionship. The sole problem remaining-after she had rather listlessly agreed to such an arrangementwas to so plan the details as to permit the negro and himself to slip through the small town clustered about the post without attracting undue attention. No doubt, the story of their escape had already reached there, embellished by telling, and serious trouble might result from discovery. Keith was surprised at the slight interest she exhibited in these arrangements, merely signifying her acquiescence by a word, but he charged it to physical weariness, and the reaction from her night of peril; yet he took pains to explain fully his plan, and to gain her consent.

This finally settled, they mounted again and rode on through the lanes traversing the sand dunes, keeping headed as straight as possible toward the river. The ford sought was some miles down stream, but with the horses' thirst mitigated, they made excellent progress, and arrived at the spot early in the evening. Not in all the day had they encountered a liv-"Indeed, I am tired; the strain of ing object, or seen a moving thing waiting alone in that cabin, and all amid the surrounding desolation. Now, looking across to the north, a few me severely. But-but I can go gleaming lights told of Fort Larned perched upon the opposite bluffs.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Landlady of the Occidental. Keith had crossed at this point so frequently with cattle that, once having his bearings, the blackness of the night made very little difference. Nevertheless, in fear lest her pony might stumble over some irregularity, he gave his own rein to Neb, and went forward on foot, grasping firmly the tired animal's bit. It was a long stretch of sand and water extending from bank to bank, but the water was shallow, the only danger being that of straying off from the more solid bottom into quicksand. With a towering cottonwood as guide, oddly misshapeh and standing out gauntly against the slightly lighter sky, the plainsman led on unhesitatingly, until they began to climb the rather sharp uplift of the north bank. Here there was a plain trail, pounded into smoothness by the hoofs of cavalry horses ridden down to water, and at the summit they emerged within fifty yards of the stables. The few lights visible, some stationary, with others dancing about like will-o'-the-wisps, revealed imperfectly the contour of various buildings, but Keith turned sharply to the right, anxious to slip past without being challenged by a sentry. Beyond the brow of the bluff other lights now became visible, flickering here and there, marking where a straggling town had sprung up under the protection of the post-a town garish enough in the daylight, composed mostly of shacks and tents, but now with its deficiencies mercifully concealed by the enveloping darkness. The trail, easily followed, led directly along its single street, but Keith circled the outskirts through a wilderness of tin-cans and heaps of other debris, until he halted his charges beside the black shadow of the only two-story edifice in the place. This was the Occidental, the hospitality of which he had frequently tested. A light streamed from out the front windows, but, uncertain who might be harbored within. Keith tapped gently at the back door. It was not opened immediately, and when it was finally shoved aside the merest crack, no glow of light revealed the darkened interior. The voice which spoke, however, was amply sufficient to identify its owner.

"Ye had a foight wid Black Bart! Oh, ye divil! An' ye licked the dirthy spalpane, an' got away wid his gyurl! Glory be! And would Oi take her? Well, OI would. Niver doubt that, me bye. She may be the quane av Shaba, an', she may be a Digger Injun Squaw, but the lolkes av him had better kape away from Kate * Murphy. It's glad Ol am ter do it! Bring her in. Ol don't want ter hear no more."

"Just a word, Kate; I don't know whether she has any money or not, but I'll pay her bill, as soon as it is safe for me to come back."

"Oh, the divil take her bill. She'll have the best in the house, annyhow, an' Oi'm only hopin' that fellow will turn up huntin' her. Ol'd loike ter take one slap at the spalpane."

Fully convinced as to Mrs. Murphy's good-will, Keith slipped back into the darkness, and returned with the girl. Introductions were superfluous, as the mistress of the Occidental cared little regarding ceremony.

"Shure It's Safe It is- Yer Goin' Ter Be Here."

"An' is this you, my dear?" she burst out, endeavoring to curb her voice to secretive softness. "Shure, Jack Keith has told me all about it, an' it's safe it is yer goin' ter be here. Come on in; Oi'll give ye number forty-two, thet's next behint me own room, an' we'll go up the back sthairs. Hilp the young loidy, Jack, fer shure ve know the way."

She disappeared, evidently with some hospitable purpose in view, and Keith, clasping the girl's hand, undertook the delicate task of safely escortidie. Jaca, would ye moind afipin me move the bid; shure, it's rale mahogany, an' so heavy it breaks me back intoirely to push it 'round."

He took hold willingly enough, and the two together ran the heavy contrivance across the room to the position selected. Once a leg caught in the rag carpet, and Keith lifted it out, bending low to get a firmer grip. Then he held out his hand to the girl.

"It is not going to be good-bye then, Miss Hope; I'll find you." She smiled up into his eyes, much of the weariness gone from her face. "I am going to believe that," she answered, gladly, "because I want to." Mrs. Murphy lingered until his steps sounded on the stairs, as he slowly felt his way down through the dark-Dess.

"He do be a moighty foine bye, Jack Keith," she said, apparently addressing the side wall. "Oi wish Oi'd a knowed him whin 'Oi was a gyurl; shure, it's not Murphy me noime'd be now, Oi'm t'inkin'."

Left alone, the girl bowed her head on her hands, a hot tear stealing down through her fingers. As she glanced up again, something that glittered on the floor beside the bed caught her eyes. She stopped and picked it up. holding the trinket to the light, staring at it as though fascinated. It was the locket Keith had taken from the neck of the dead man at Cimmaron Crossing. Her nerveless fingers pressed the spring, and the painted face within looked up into her own, and still clasping it within her hand, she sank upon her knees, burying her face his pony's flank, unable to answer, yet on the bed.

"Where did he get that?" her lips kept repeating. "Where did he ever get that?"

CHAPTER XV.

Again Christie Maclaire. Keith possessed sufficient means for several months of idleness, and even if he had not, his reputation as a plains scout would insure him employment at any of the more important scattered army posts. Reliable men for such service were in demand. The restlessness of the various Indian tribes, made specially manifest by raids on the more advanced settlements, and extending over a constantly widening territory, required continuous interchange of communication between commanders of detachments. Bold and reckless spirits had flocked to the frontier in those days following the Civil War, yet all were not of the type to encourage confidence in military authorities. Keith had al- yond their radius he could safely disready frequently served in this capacity, and abundantly proved his pear from view, and find time to deworth under rigorous demands of both endurance and intelligence and ha endurance and intelligence, and he could feel assured of permanent employment whenever desired. Not a few of the more prominent officers he had met personally during the late war-including Sheridan, to whom he had once borne a flag of truce-yet. the spirit of the Confederacy still lingered in his heart; not in any feeling of either hatred or revenge, but in anunwillingness to serve the blue uniform, and a memory of antagonism which would not entirely disappear. He had surrendered at Appomattox, conquered, yet he could not quite adjust himself to becoming companionin-arms with those against whom he had fought valiantly for four years. Some of the wounds of that conflict still smarted. A natural soldier, anxious to help the harassed settlers, eager enough to be actively employed, he still held aloof from army connections except as a volunteer in case of

was there. Hawley knew her too, and called her by name."

Neb rubbed his eyes, and slapped still unconvinced.

"I reck'n both ob yer might be mistook," he insisted doggedly.

"Not likely," and Keith's brief laugh was not altogether devoid of bitterness. "We both called her Christie Maclaire, and she didn't even deny the name; she was evidently not proud of it, but there was no denial that she was the girl."

"Dat wasn't like no name dat you called her when we was ridin'." "No; she didn't approve of the oth-

They rode on through the black, silent night as rapidly as their tired horses would consent to travel. Keith led directly across the open prairie. guiding his course by the stars, and purposely avoiding the trails, where some suspicious eye might mark their passage. His first object was to get safely away from the scattered settlements lying east of Carson City. Bepose of the horses they rode, disapher, of course, and see her again sometime. There would be no dimculty about that, but otherwise she should retain no influence over him. She belonged rather to Hawley's class than his. It was a lonely, tiresome ride, during which Neb made various efforts to talk, but finding his white companion uncommunicative, at last relapsed into rather sullen silence. The horses plodded on steadily, and when daylight finally dawned, the two men found themselves in a depression leading down to the Smoky River. Here they came to a water hole, where they could safely hide themselves and their stock. With both Indians and white men to be guarded against, they took all the necessary -precautions, picketing the horses closely under the rock shadows, and not venturing upon building any fire. Neb threw himself on the turf and was instantly asleep. but Keith climbed the steep side of the gully, and made searching survey of the horizon. The wide arc to the south, east and west revealed nothing oned for it, and in order to escape, to his searching eyes, except the dull brown of the slightly rolling plains, with no life apparent save some distant grazing antelope, but to the north extended more broken country with a faint glimmer of water between the hills. Satisfied they were unobserved, he slid back again into the depression. As he turned to lie down he took hold of the saddle belonging to Hawley's horse in the unbuckled holster his eye observed the glimmer of a bit of white paper. He drew it forth, and gazed at it unthinkingly. It was an envelope, robbed of its contents, evidently not sent through the mails, as it had not been stamped, but across its face was plainly written, "Miss Christie Maclaire." He stared at it, his lips firm set, his gray eyes darkening. If he possessed any doubts before as to her identity, they were all thoroughly dissipated now.

knew regarding a certain crime, in which either he, or some of his intimate friends, were deeply interested." "But it would all come out at the trial, wouldn't it?"

"There was to be no trial; Judge Lynch settles the majority of such cases out here at present. It is extremely simple. Listen, and I will tell you the story."

He reviewed briefly those occurrences leading directly up to his arrest, saying little regarding the horrors of that scene witnessed near the Cimmaron Crossing, but making sufficiently clear his very slight connection with it, and the reason those who were guilty of the crime were so anxious to get him out of the way. She listened intently, asking few questions, until he ended. Then they both looked up, conscious that dawn was becoming gray in the east. Keith's first thought was one of relief-the bright sky showed him they were riding straight north.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Ford of the Arkansas. They were still in the midst of the yellow featureless plain, but the weary horses had slowed down to a walk, the heavy sand retarding progress. It was a gloomy, depressing scene in the spectral gray light, a wide circle of intense loneliness, unbroken by either dwarfed shrub or bunch of grass, a barren expanse stretching to the sky. Vague cloud shadows seemed to flit across the level surface, assuming fantastic shapes, but all of the same dull coloring, imperfect and unfinished. Nothing seemed tangible or real, but rather some grotesque picture of delirium, ever merging into another yet more hideous. The very silence of those surrounding wastes seemed burdensome, adding immeasurably to the horror. They were but specks crawling underneath the sky-the only living, moving objects in all that immense circle of desolation and death. Keith turned in his saddle, looking back past Neb-who swayed in his seat, with head lolling on his breast as though asleep, his horse plodding after the others-along the slight trail they had made across the desert. So far as eye could reach nothing moved. nothing apparently existed. Fronting again to the north he looked upon the same grim barrenness, only that far off, against the lighter background of distant sky, there was visible a faint blur, a bluish haze, which he believed to be the distant sand dunes bordering the Arkansas. The intense dreariness of it all left a feeling of depression. His eyes turned and regarded the girl riding silently beside him. The same look of depression was visible upon her face, and she was gazing off into the dull distance with lack-luster eyes, her slender form leaning forward, her hands clasped across the pommel. The long weariness of the night had left traces on her young face, robbing ferent." it of some of its freshness, yet Keith found it more attractive in the growing daylight than amid the lamp shad-could lie to you." It was no compliment, but spoken with such evident honesty that her eyes met his with frankness.

"There could be no necessity; only wanted you to know that I trust you, and am grateful."

She extended her hand this time, and he took it within his own, holding it firmly, yet without knowing what to answer. There was strong impulse within him to question her, to learn then and there her own life story. Yet, somehow, the reticence of the girl restrained him; he could not deliberately probe beneath the vell she kept lowered between them. Until she chose to lift it herself voluntarily, be possessed no right to intrude. The gentlemanly instincts of younger years held him silent, realizing clearly that whatever secret might dominate her life, it was hers to conceal just so long as she pleased. Out of this swift struggle of repression he managed to say:

"I appreciate your confidence, and mean to prove worthy. Perhaps some day I can bring you the proofs."

"I need none other than your own word."

"Oh, but possibly you are too easily convinced; you believed in Hawley." She looked at him searchingly, her eyes glowing, her cheeks flushed. "Yes," she said slowly, convincingly. "I know I did; I-I was so anxious to be helped, but-but this is dif-

"The Lord deliver us!" was the instant exclamation, the door opening wide. "They do be afther tellin' me to-night av the throuble ye was in over at Carson, an' Oi t'ought maybe ye moight turn up this way. "But down on the Salt Fork we ran across a young girl whom Black Bart had inveigled down that way on a lie. W- and a bit of a fight, and got her away from him. This is what brought us back here-to put the girl where she will be safe out of his clutches." The door was wide open now, and Mrs. Murphy outside, her interest at ing her through the dark kitchen, and up the dimly remembered stairs. Only a word or two passed between them, but as they neared the second story a light suddenly streamed out through the opened door of a room at their left. Mrs. Murphy greeted 'hem at the landing, and for the first time saw the girl's weary white face, her eyes filled with appeal, and the warm Irish heart responded instantly.

"Ye poor little lamb; it's the bid ye want, an' a dhrap o' whiskey. Jack Keith, why didn't ye till me she was done up wid the hard ride? Here, honey, sit down in the rocker till Of get ye a wee dhrink. It'll bring the roses back to the cheeks av ye." She was gone, bustling down the dark stairs, and the two were alone in the room, the girl looking up into his face, her head resting against the cushioned back of the chair. He thought he saw a glimmer of tears in the depths emergency. of her lash-shaded eyes, and her round white throat seemed to choke.

"You will be perfectly secure here, he said, soothingly, "and can remain as long as you please. Mrs. Murphy will guard you as though you were her own daughter. She is a bit rough, maybe, but a big-hearted woman, and despises Hawley. She nursed me once through a touch of typhoid-yes, by Jove," glancing about in sudden recognition, "and in this very room, too.'

The girl's glance wandered over the plain, neat furnishings, and the rather pathetic attempts at decoration, yet with apparently no thought for them. "You-you have not told me where you were going."

He laughed, a little uneasily, as though he preferred to make light of the whole matter.

"Really, I have hardly decided, the world is so wide, and I had no reason to suppose you interested."

"But I am interested," resenting his tone of assumed indifference. "I would not want to feel that our acquaintance was to wholly end now." "Do you really mean that?"

"Why should I not? You have been a real friend to me; I shall remember you always with a gratitude beyond words. I want you to know this, and that-that I shall ever wish to retain that friendship."

Keith struggled with himself, doubtful of what he had best say, swayed by unfamiliar emotions. "You may be sure I shall never forget," he blurted forth, desperately, "and, if you really wish it, I'll certainly see you again." "I do," earnestly.

"Then, I'll surely find a way. I don't know now which direction we will ride, but I'm not going very far until I clear up that murder out yonder on the trail; that is my particular job just now."

Before she could answer, Mrs. Murphy re-entered and forced her to drink the concoction prepared, the girl accepting with smiling protest. The landlady, empty glass in hand, swept her eyes about the room.

"Bedad, but the place looks betther than iver Oi'd belaved, wid the gyur? Of've got tindin' to it. She's that lazy she goes ter slape swanin' the

Just now other considerations caused him to desire freedom. He had been accused of murder, imprishad been compelled to steal horses, the most helnous crime of the frontier. Not only for his own protection and safety must the truth of that occurrence at the Cimmaron Crossing be made clear, but he also had now a personal affair with "Black Bart" Hawley to be permanently settled. They had already clashed twice, and Keith intended they should meet again.

Memory of the girl was still in his mind as he and Neb rode silently forth on the black prairie, leading the extra horse behind him. He endeavored to drive the recollection from his mind, so he might concentrate it upon plans for the future, but somehow she mysteriously wove her own personality into those plans, and he was ever seeing the pleading in her eyes, and listening to the soft Southern accent of her voice. Of late years he had been unaccustomed to association with women of high type, and there was that touch of the gentlewoman about this girl which had awakened deep interest. Of course he knew that in her case it was merely an inheritance of her past, and could not truly represent the present Christie Maclaire of the music halls. However fascinating she might be, she could not be worthy any serious consideration. In spite of his rough life the social spirit of the old South was implanted in his blood, and no woman of that class could hold him captive. Yet, some way, she refused to be banished or left behind. Even Neb must have been obsessed by a similar spirit, for he suddenly observed:

"Dat am sutt'nly a mighty fine gal, Massa Jack. I ain't seen nothin' to compare wid her since I quit ol' Virginia-'deed I ain't."

Keith glanced back at his black satellite, barely able to distinguish the fellow's dim outlines.

"You think her a lady, then?" he questioned, giving thoughtless utterance to his own imagination.

"Deed I does!" the thick voice somewhat indignant. "I reck'n I knows de real quality when I sees it. I'se 'sociated wid quality white folks befo'."

As he lay there, with head pillowed on the saddle, his body aching from fatigue yet totally unable to sleep staring open-eyed into the blue of the sky, the girl they had left behin awoke from uneasy slumber, arous by the entrance of Mrs. Murphy. an instant she failed to comprehen

"I haven't slept very well," the confessed, bringing her hand out fro beneath the coverlet, the locket st tightly clasped in her finger. "See, found this on the floor last night after you had gone down stairs."

"Ye did!" setting the coffee on convenient chair, and reaching out f the trinket. "Let's have a look at once. Angels av Hiven, if it isn't t same the ol' Gineral was showin' in the parly."

Know Your City.

How many people of a city or even a village know their town, its attainments; its resources and its possibilities? We may know all about our neighbors but we do we know the output of our factories; the volume of trade, our agricultural and industrial needs and are we sufficiently versed in public affairs to feel the pulse of city life?

Knowledge is said to be the fount that makes all brooks flow and certainly no man can hope to contribute toward the progress of his city until he knows his town and can recite its advantages, hopes and possibilities.
