allocations have been devised and it is reported they will be available in county ASC offices about the first week of November. Pending referendums being held they will be for use only within counties and between farms of the same ownership.

A number of producers have asked about cross-compliance requirements under the new program. The latest indication is that cross-compliance between crops on the same farm will not be required. But as previously reported cross-compliance on the same crop between farms will be a requirement.

This means a farmer would not be required to be in compliance on grain sorghums in order to be a cooperator in the cotton program, but could not be in the cotton program on one farm and produce for export on another farm owned or operated by him.

Cong. George Mahon Returns to District Congressman George Mahon returned to the District early this week following "a rugged and historic session of Congress which set a modern record of 388 roll call votes in the House and the passage of 85 pieces of major legislation."

Mahon, who played a key role during the session of Congress as Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, which provides legislation for funds for all government programs, says he feels that the country needs to pause and deliberate to digest the huge amount of legislation which has been passed.

Mahon pointed out that the ultimate success or failure of the legislation, including the Farm bill, will depend on how well the program are administered by the Executive Branch.

The Congressman expressed pleasure at being home again and indicated his intention to spend as much time as possible between now and the next session of Congress out among the people of the 20-county district.

Mahon will be in Washington early next week to join Texas Tech officials in conference with federal officials.

Artificial Sweeteners—A New Study

Consumption of a widely used artificial sweetener curbs the growth of test animals and stunts their young, an American research team has discovered.

The synthetic sweetener is calcium cyclamate, one of the leading sugar substitutes now employed in low-calorie beverages and food.

Laboratory rats receiving 5% of the chemical in their food grew 12% less after nine months on the diet than animals on a normal diet. When the proportion of cyclamate was raised to 10%, there was 50% more impairment of growth.

Growth Impaired

Female animals on the cyclamate diets gave birth to apparently normal litters. Growth of their young at the time of weaning, however, averaged considerably less than animals born of mothers on conventional diets. Weanlings of females on 5% cyclamate diets grew on the average 15% less by three weeks, while weanlings of females on 10% diets grew 37% less than normal young.

Further experiments have been mapped to determine if the stunted growth of the test animals was caused by the toxicity of the calcium cyclamate or by its interference with the normal absorption of food in the body.

Report Findings

These findings are reported by Philip H. Dorse and Paul Nees in the October 2 issue of "Nature", the noted British scientific weekly. The scientists conducted their experimental study of the artificial sweetener at the Wisconsin Alumni Research Foundation at Madison, Wisconsin, under contract from The Sugar Research Foundation of New York.

Except for the cyclamate, the test rats had a completely nutritious diet and they were permitted to eat as much as they wished. As a result, it was pointed out, these animals ate more until they actually received as many food values as rats on normal feeding. The article states that the cause of the impaired growth was the chemical sweetener itself, since both the test rats and those on normal feeding were receiving equal nourishment.
