

HIGH SCHOOL SAW-DUST

AGRICULTURAL CLASS GRATEFUL.

We, the members of the agricultural class, wish to express our sincere thanks to the Chamber of Commerce and to Prof. Rose for the wonderful trip to the Panhandle-Plains Dairy Show.

We cannot tell how much we learned while we were there, but we surely believe that the trip was well worth the time, and we hope that you may never regret sending us, and that you feel that we have learned something that we will never forget.

Although we did not win a prize, we do not feel that the time was spent in vain. We did our best, but that did not win. We learned many things that we do not have the opportunity to learn at home.

We saw some of the best bred cows in the Panhandle. The fine Holsteins were from the Lubbock College and from Plainview. The Canyon College is the owner of the grand champion cow. In all there were about 250 cows there, the cream of the Plains, they might be called. Some of those fine cows were sold at auction and brought high prices.

As we have said, we thank the Chamber of Commerce for sending us and hope they feel they have done a great deal toward helping the boys of the agricultural class toward learning and judging dairy cows.

THE CLASS.

SCHOOL INSPECTOR'S REPORT

The Friona high school was visited last week by an inspector sent out by the State Department of Education, and while here he passed many complimentary remarks regarding the school, its advancement under the present faculty, the condition of the building and grounds and, last but not least, upon the superintendent and other members of the faculty.

Prof. Conway has very kindly furnished us with a copy of the official report of the inspector which was forwarded to him from the office of the state department, and which we are pleased to use here for the benefit of those of our readers who are deeply interested in the welfare and progress of our school. We will give only that portion of the report which applies wholly and individually to the Friona school, which is as follows:

"In order that the schools may be properly certified it is essential that minimum requirements be met. To that end the supervisor who recently visited your school, makes the following recommendations:

1. That every effort be made to vote bonds for the erection of another school building. The enrollment has grown so much within the past few years that a comparatively new building no longer accommodates the entire student body.

2. That at least one other grade teacher should be added to the school system by September, 1928.

3. That at least $70.00 be spent in bringing the grade libraries up to standard.

4. That, before another year, additional essays, biographies, historical and drama fiction be purchased for the high school library. The greater number of these books should be contemporary authors.

5. That an electric bell system be installed.

6. That commendation be given for the continued growth of the school, as evidenced by the addition of three other teachers to the school system, the broadening of the course to include the commercial arts, and the purchase of $125 worth of library books. Plans are also under way to vote bonds for building purposes.

7. That further commendation be given for the cleanliness of the building and grounds, the high qualifications of the faculty, the excellent behaviour of the pupils and the character of the work observed. Friona has a school in which the citizens may well take pride.

8. That appreciation be expressed for the courtesies shown the representative of the Department.

9. That application be made for the following units of credits: Agriculture (1-2 ad), Bookkeeping (1), Typewriting (1), physiology and Physiography (1-2 ad, each).

SCHOOL BOARD ORGANIZES.

At a joint meeting of both the old and new school boards of the Friona Independent Schools Wednesday night the old board was dissolved and the new board organized.

A. S. Curry who has been serving during the past year as president, and F. P. Brookfield, one of the newly elected members, were nominated for president of the board, and the vote resulted in a tie, and temporary chairman, Prof. J. A. Conway, refused to cast the deciding vote, so it was left for a future meeting to decide with conditions favoring Mr. Curry.

F. N. Welch, another of the newly elected members, was unanimously chosen as secretary of the board.

Dairy Exhibit at Plainview Voted Success

PLAINVIEW, April 11.—The Panhandle Plains Dairy Show

series of events Friday was generally considered to be a decided success. Many thought that it will result in more constructive benefit to the dairy industry in this section than any single event in the history of the marked development of dairying during the past few years.

At the close of the show, directors and citizens met and voted to hold the show annually in Plainview and to make an effort to increase its size and value each year. Eastern New Mexico was added to the Panhandle Plains counties from which the dairy animals were entered.

Many prominent dairymen, breeders and feature newspaper and magazine men attended the show and spoke highly of the quality of animals shown and the number of entries. J. W. Ridgeway, manager of the Mistotee Creameries of Ft. Worth, and a leading Jersey judge of America, judged the dairy cattle and declared the show was three times what the most optimistic expected.

Three classes of dairy cattle were shown, Jerseys, Holsteins and Guernseys, with some excellent animals in each class.

In addition to the display of cattle there was an auction sale at which thirty animals were sold on Thursday and brought a total price of approximately $5,000. A production contest of twenty-four hours ended Friday and on that day the boys' stock judging teams from twelve Panhandle schools entered a contest. The Tulsa high school boys carried away premier honors in this event.

Plainview was chosen as the permanent location of the dairy show because of its central location relative to the most highly developed section of dairy activities.

In selecting Plainview the directors looked into the future and saw visions of great accomplishments in this section. One factor that must be considered is the location of Wayland College at Plainview. The college was recently declared practically out of debt and plans are being made for a great expansion and growth. Wayland will not only grow in itself but will contribute to the growth of the surrounding territory because a well established higher institution of learning is often a deciding factor among the farmers and business men who are seeking a permanent location in a growing country.

Lubbock Ready for Convention of Rotary Clubs

LUBBOCK.—Lubbock Rotarians and other Lubbock citizens are waiting with open arms for the coming here April 19 and 20 of some 500 visiting Rotarians and "Rotary-Anns" when the 11st district convention of the Rotary International will be held.

"It is to be Ellis H. Boyd's party," Jed A. Riv, of Lubbock, general chairman of the Lubbock committees says in speaking of the District Governor, and over fifty towns and cities of West Texas will have delegations here. Fort Worth and other towns are to run special trains to Lubbock for the convention.

Women's Clubs Convene Soon In Many States

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Conventions of State Federations of Women's Clubs are being held in 26 states this spring. Programs of local, state and national interest built up around the departmental program of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in which all State Federations hold membership, will be presented. The election of officers, at which at least a partial new board will be

MANY EYES

"Well," said the caterpillar, "spring is the beautiful time of the year when the flowers burst into bloom, the buds open, the leaves begin to appear, butterflies and crystal creatures follow.

"Ah, the spring is wondrous."

"Well, neither of us think much of the winter," said the jumping spider, "for both of us sleep in the winter."

"I got all ready for my sleep last autumn."

"So did I," said the caterpillar. "I fuss a good deal before I am all ready. I have to see that I am safe and secure from other creatures who might disturb my winter's nap."

"I do some interesting things, you know."

"Tell me about them," said the jumping spider politely.

"I belong to the family of caterpillars which weaves its own chrysalis cases out of hairs and wool from its summer coats.

"Some of the families find some silk which they have grown within themselves which they use."

"Sounds very strange to me," said the jumping spider.

"It does sound strange," said the caterpillar, "but it is true."

"I am glad to hear about you," said the jumping spider.

"I have told you about myself, and now I must nap a little longer before I get up and get ready for the beautiful spring."

"I am not quite, quite awake yet, but I have begun to stir and soon, very soon, I will be very, very wide awake."

"But just before I take one more little nap, won't you tell me about yourself, Jumping Spider, for I am sure you must be interesting?"

"In fact I know you are interesting. And I would like to hear your story before we both leave each other entirely.

"It is strange that we should have chosen our winter home so near each other."

"Hurry and tell your story, for I see you are really wide awake."

"Why wouldn't I be pretty wide awake with all the eyes I have?" asked the jumping spider.

"All the eyes?" repeated the caterpillar.

"Yes," said the jumping spider, "my name and the fact that I can jump amounts to very little when you think of my eyes."

"I will think of your eyes, but tell me more about them so I can think more," said the caterpillar.

"I have been in this closely woven tent," said the jumping spider, "as you can see."

"It is here I have stayed all winter. As you see, I have a good broad nose. I would hate to have a little narrow nose, or, in short, any other nose than the one I have."

"It is nice to be satisfied," said the caterpillar.

"Both nice and sensible," said the jumping spider.

"Pray continue," urged the caterpillar.

"My eyes are very small in size, and they look like little beads," continued the jumping spider.

"But it makes no difference if they are small, for I have several pairs of eyes, I have."

"I feel very sorry for creatures who have only one pair of eyes. And so, you see, when I become wide awake I become very wide, for I have so many eyes to open."

"Ah me, ah my. It is fine to be a jumping spider with many eyes, several pairs of eyes at least, and to wake up in the spring after a good, long, refreshing sleep," ended the jumping spider.

"Now I've caught up, chief," Gardiner was saying, "for heaven's sake tell me why you gave this follow the right to limit sales for five years. You heard him talk. You'll be making batteries for rowboats only, if you don't watch out."

"Suits me!" returned Grimstead calmly.

"I don't believe I got your idea."

"Well, you asked me if I heard him talk. Yes, I heard him talk and I've heard that kind of talk all my life. It always comes from a half-baked, impractical chump who is so full of impossible ideas that he never gets anywhere, and who couldn't see the main point if you wrapped it in his breakfast napkin. You got to handle that kind, and handle 'em right, or you'll never get an inch."

"That's true enough," commented Gardiner.

It is probable that Davenport would have broken in at this point in some spectacular fashion had not Burton held his arm and placed her fingers over his lips.

"All he sees is that these batteries of his will replace the world's power and that a lot of high-falutin' things will happen for the benefit of the human race and all that visionary rot that's never worked out yet and never will."

"What do we care what he thinks as long as we can sell the batteries?" queried Gardiner. "It's going to take quite some few batteries of any size you name to replace the world's power, and that is the eventual market. If the thing works."

"We're assuming that it works," growled the older man, "otherwise there's nothing doing."

"Then why limit the sale to what this nut thinks proper?"

"You're nearly as bad as he is, Ross," observed Grimstead, a note of good humor creeping into his voice. "I'll give you a demonstration that will impress it on you."

"Shoot!" observed Gardiner.

"You asked me last night how many shares in this thing you get. Well, you don't get any."

CHAPTER XVI Treachery

A blank silence of some seconds ensued.

"I don't believe I understand," then said Gardiner in fatherly strangled voice.

"Me and this young man will hold all the stock," emphasized Grimstead.

"Then where do I come in?" demanded Gardiner with a note of rising indignation.

Grimstead chuckled.

"You wouldn't come in one cent's worth if we should do as you seemed to think we would begin to manufacture and market these things promiscuously!"

Gardiner apparently regained his equanimity.

"Well, chief, I don't get you yet; but I've been on the job long enough to know you have some notion of taking care of me."

"I told you that; and that I am going to use you."

"I think we ought to let them know we are here," whispered Davenport uneasily.

"I don't like this," she whispered back. "It's your business they're discussing—and mine!"

Davenport's heart leaped at the last words, but she was leaning forward again, eavesdropping with all her might.

"If I can get one good working model I don't care whether another of the things is made for 10 years, let alone five," stated Grimstead.

"You're right," Gardiner replied slowly, "with capital—"

"Which I supply! I'll smash carburetor first of all, blast his hide; and I'll twist the necks of the Northwest Electric bunch; and I'll have them in packs begging at my office door. They'll see the point don't worry; and those of them who don't will go to the poor house. My Lord, man! Think of the shake-down! This is going to put every hydro-electric company, every public utility outfit out of business! Not to speak of all the oil and coal and such things. The securities of those companies won't be worth a red cent. The stock market, man! Think of the market! There are a hundred dollars to be had there for every dollar out of the mere sale of those things! Why, you and I will have the world by the tail!"

house. They'll be crying to get aboard; and you and I will sit there and decide the terms. We can buy their stocks and bonds for a song."

"And resell at the market," caught up Gardiner, but that means secrecy as to this battery."

"That's one place where you come in. You should be able to handle the publicity."

"I can if there aren't too many of the confounded things attracting attention."

"I'll see to that. There won't be any of them! The contract says manufacture must start in six months; it doesn't say anything about marketing."

"There are bound to be leaks."

"A thousand of them. But who would pay any attention to the mere rumors of another perpetual motion scheme? That's part of your job."

A short pause ensued while the two men evidently envisaged the opportunity.

"Why, Chief!" cried Gardiner at length, his voice vibrant with excitement. "It's tremendous! It's half the money in the world! It's all the power! You will rule the globe!"

"Just about that. Give me five years and I'll be the richest man in the world; that much is certain. But what is more, I'll have the old crowd down and out or taking my orders. There'll be the biggest smash in history, and you and I, Ross, my boy, will push the button and take our pick of the prices. Then when we've got the whole situation in our hands we can decide just how far we'll go with this battery proposition. One thing certain: We'll be in a position to do just as much or just as little with it as we choose," Grimstead chuckled.

"This man Davenport, isn't he likely to upset the apple cart?" inquired Gardiner.

"That's part of my job," answered Grimstead. "I'll guarantee to handle that young man." There were sounds of rising "So you better string with me, Ross, and take orders, and not ask too many questions."

"I intend to!" cried Gardiner fervently.

They moved off down stream, and were almost immediately lost to sight around the lower bend.

CHAPTER XVII

Burton was aflame with indignation, and was bursting out with comments suitable to the occasion; but Davenport silenced her with a gesture.

"Please," he begged, "let me think."

He was very grave.

"This is rather terrible," he said at length.

"It is atrocious!" she cried. "It is treacherous! That they should treat you so!"

"Me? Oh, I don't matter. But his ideas are all destructive! He sees a chance to tear down and to build up his own personal power from the debris. That had not even occurred to me! I saw only the releasing of pressure—"

"You aren't going to lie down and let them do this?"

"No, that must not be."

"What are you going to do, then?"

"I don't know."

He arose without further words, and the two took their way back to the camp. Grimstead roared at them jovially.

"Come and look at the rainbow!" he shouted.

Davenport stood gravely unsmiling before the chief.

"Mr. Grimstead," said he, "I overheard your conversation with Mr. Gardiner at the bend of the stream."

Grimstead's face flushed darkly.

"Well?" he challenged.

"I cannot be party to the program I heard outlined."

Grimstead considered a moment.

"Sit down," he invited. "Have a cigar. There's plenty of time to talk this thing out, so there's no excuse to go off half-cocked." Davenport declined the cigar, but sat on the log.

"Now what's the trouble?" demanded Grimstead.

"The trouble is that your program is destructive," stated Davenport succinctly, "and aims merely at personal power without a thought to the welfare of other people. The thing is likely to prove a curse rather than a benefit. I think you are intelligent enough to understand my point without going into it further."

"I understand your point all right. And I understand your sort too well to argue with you. Argument's the long suit of your kind. So I'm just telling you. It's too bad you don't like my program but I play the cards I hold and that is final."

"In those circumstances I shall refuse to enter into this deal."

"In those circumstances it doesn't matter a damn whether you do or not. You've already entered into it."

"I shall refuse to sign the contract."
