WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS POINT OUT ADVANTAGES OF DEMONSTRATION AGENT

According to the report of Miss Mildred Horton, state home demonstration agent, a total of 15,433 girls were members of home demonstration clubs and 19,063 women, making a total of 35,000 with the 99 county home demonstration agents contacted.

The most valuable portion of the work so far as dollars and cents are concerned was in the food preservation, amounting to a little over $2,000,000. Next in financial importance was poultry raising, with products valued at nearly one and three-fourths million dollars. Garden and dairy products followed with a valuation of over $118,000. The significance of these productive demonstrations is not so much in the fact that the farm income has been increased as it is in the more important measures of health that better food has brought to these families.

Clothing is also recognized as an important adjunct of living. Home demonstration agents are showing farm women and girls how to meet the situation of how to dress appropriately and cheaply and the success of their work is shown by over $929,000 valuation placed on the clothing work last year. Then came the value of beautifying yards and living rooms and modernizing kitchens, adding running water, installing labor-saving devices and improving bed rooms for farm women and girls. Yet it should not stop there, for men and boys in these families are beneficiaries also.

Texas leads every other state in the Union in the number of county home demonstration agents, with 105 employed and eleven counties on the waiting list to get agents as soon as state and federal funds are available to match the county funds that have already been appropriated.

The Friona Woman's Club and the Parmer County Federation of Clubs are sponsoring this move for better equipped homes and more beautiful and productive gardens and yards for Friona and Parmer county. To this end the district home demonstrator will visit Friona some time in the near future to assist in the work. The exact date will be announced later.

CHURCH OF CHRIST

Minister G. A. Dunn of Dallas will begin a meeting Sunday, June 2, in the school auditorium. Bible study at 10:00 a. m., preaching at 11:00 a. m. on this date. Public cordially invited.

G. W. TURNER STRICKEN

G. W. Turner, a highly respected citizen of the town and recent owner of the American Cafe, received a second paralytic stroke here Saturday night and was taken to the Hereford hospital.

MRS. EBERLING TO FT. WORTH

Mrs. H. P. Eberling departed for Fort Worth Saturday to visit relatives and friends there. Her stay will be indefinite as she may be home within two weeks or perhaps not for six weeks or longer.

THE MISSES WIMBERLY TO ATTEND SCHOOL

Miss Opal Wimberly, who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Wimberly, the past week returned to Lubbock Sunday, where she will resume her work in the Lubbock Sanitarium where she is taking a nursing course.

WHEAT HURT SOME BY COLD AND DRY WEATHER

F. N. Welch whose farm is about five miles northeast of town and who is one of our most successful wheat growers, while in Friona Tuesday stated that wheat is hurt some, but not seriously. Mr. Welch says there will be a few blasted heads in nearly every field as a result of the recent frosts and slight freezes, but that the loss or damage from this source will be negligible. He says these blighted heads can easily be distinguished from their lack of green in the chaff. Mr. Welch also thinks that there will be a slight loss in the yield in some of the earlier sowing caused by the recent dry spell, but he feels that this loss will not be serious. He gives as his opinion that there will be an average yield over the territory of from fifteen to twenty bushels. He expressed an opinion that the greatest loss will be from a low price.

Workmen Put Finishing Touches on Building

The roofers and metal workers were here the greater part of this week putting the roof and metal ceiling on the new Turner-Parr building on Main Street. At the present rate of progress this splendid business block will soon be ready for occupancy. So far as the general public is concerned it is only conjecture as to what line of business will occupy the building when completed, but this is certain, whoever may get it will certainly have a modern business home.

ENJOY WEINER ROAST

A goodly gathering of neighbors and friends was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schlenker, eighteen miles west of Friona, Monday night. The evening was spent in playing games and roasting and eating weiners, which furnished a joyful program for all present. The party was given in honor of their daughters, Misses Florence and Beulah who are now visiting at home.

Those who attended from Friona were Raymond Wright and Misses Orna White and Alice Guyer.

TO MY PATRONS AND FRIENDS

Having accepted a position in another city, I am leaving Friona as my home, and while I shall always cherish the memory of my stay in Friona, I feel it my duty to myself to make this change. I therefore take this method of thanking my many patrons and business associates for their courtesy, patronage and friendship while here, and trust I shall still be favored with your good will and patronage.

CARROLL BOWLIN.

LIGHTS FAIL SUNDAY NIGHT

Owing to a break down in the engine of the local light plant Sunday afternoon our city was in darkness for the greater part of Sunday night. Church services had to be dispensed with at some of the churches as there was no means of furnishing light. At the Methodist church however the congregation was able to resort to the gas lamps formerly used in the building, so that the services went on as usual.

RHEA COMMENCEMENT.

Commencement exercises of the Rhea school were held Saturday night in the Rhea school building. The program was set for Friday night but rainy weather hindered and postponement was made until Saturday night. There were seven graduates in the class and the stage was prettily decorated. The program was well attended and the work of the class speaks well of the ability of the teachers, Misses Marie Gardner and Vivian Boston. A car load of Friona people attended the exercises.

Friona Territory Gets Another Good Rain

The supply of sunshine for this locality during the past week has been decidedly limited as compared to the usual output of that quality of weather with which our people are familiar.

In fact there has been only a little of it on account of the continually cloudy weather. We were visited with another good soaking rain of about three-fourths of an inch on Thursday night and Friday morning, with occasional showers and sprinkles, which condition has kept the farmers out of the fields for the past two weeks, but time has continued to glide by just the same until it is now getting time for crops to be in the ground. However very little if any complaint is heard, since the abundant moisture now in the ground assures the rapid growth of crops when once they are planted.

In connection with the lack of sunshine and the presence of showers, the temperature has been quite low for the time of year, so that a light fire has been necessary for comfort in homes and business houses.

CARROLL BOWLIN TO CLOVIS

Carroll Bowlin, one of our most energetic young business men who has for the past several months been connected with the Wilkison Chevrolet Company of this city, has severed connections with that concern and accepted a position with the McCrory Chevrolet Company of Clovis, New Mexico.

Mr. Bowlin has been a resident of Friona for the past four years, being originally with the Blackwell Hardware and Furniture Company and later with the Sikos Chevrolet Company of Farwell, as local representative here.

Severing his relations with that organization he associated himself with J. C. Wilkison as manager and salesman of the Wilkison Chevrolet Company of this city.

His new position comes to him unsought as an evidence of his ability as a salesman of ability and integrity and carries with it a very substantial uplift financially.

Mr. Bowlin's chivalrous and affable disposition have won for him a large circle of friends in Friona and vicinity, all of whom will regret his departure. All, however, join in wishing him the utmost success in his new location.

VISITS IN STRATFORD

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Pemberton drove over to Stratford the latter part of last week for a visit with relatives and friends. Mr. Pemberton returned Monday, but Mrs. Pemberton will be away for several weeks.

Miss Bessie Harry departed for Clovis last Sunday where she has accepted employment in the Baptist hospital during the summer vacation. Miss Kathryn Conway of this place is also employed there.

HARDWARE TO OPEN IN FRIONA SOON

O. G. Turner of the Turner-Parr Trading Company, has informed the Star that one of the rooms in the splendid new building which the company is now erecting on Main Street will be occupied by a stock of shelf hardware.

B. T. Galloway has stated that he will be the proprietor of this new business and expects to have his stock completely installed within the next few weeks. Mr. Galloway is well known and well liked by his many friends here, who will welcome him to the business circles of the town, and we bespeak for him a most liberal patronage.

Farmers Urged to Plant Cotton Early as Possible

Those experienced in cotton growing state that now is a most favorable time for planting cotton for a good yield this season. Good varieties of cotton, it is said, may be planted as late as the tenth of June and yet have sufficient time for making a splendid yield of lint this season.

Mr. Browning advises the farmers to get busy with their planting, as the season now in the ground and the warmth now in the ground and due at this season of the year will furnish the ideal conditions for giving the crop a most advantageous start.

Last year cotton was the best money crop grown here and with the prevailing conditions now existing there is no reason why this should not be a more paying season than last.

With the present prospect for low wheat prices, it certainly behooves farmers to forestall such a condition by planting plentifully of some other good ready money crop, therefore plant cotton.

Life Is Like This.

Little Johnny Jones wants to know why vitamins are put in spinach and cod liver oil instead of in cake and candy. It is queer, Johnny.

Whoopie

Doctor—"I am afraid I have bad news for you. You will never be able to work again."

College Student—"What do you mean bad news?"

Miss Bessie Harry departed for Clovis last Sunday where she has accepted employment in the Baptist hospital during the summer vacation. Miss Kathryn Conway of this place is also employed there.

New Business Will Open At Once

The newest thing in the business development of Friona is the announcement by Carl C. Maurer of plans to build a large two-story brick building on the corner of Fifth and Main Streets, the lower story of which will be used as a hardware and machinery store by the Maurer Hardware and Machinery Company.

Mr. Maurer has just let this information out for the benefit of the public Friday morning and in making the announcement stated that he had already let the contract for the building with work on same to state as soon as materials can be assembled. W. A. McNelly of Hereford is the contractor.

The building will be of brick and fireproof throughout and will be 80 x 32 feet in dimensions, the upper floor divided into office rooms and living apartments.

Mr. Maurer is a home product, having spent almost his entire life in the Friona community and for the past several years has been identified with the Santa Fe Grain company of this place. He is a young man of unimpeachable character and integrity and possessed of a rare business ability. His many friends of Friona and vicinity wish him unbounded success in his new venture.

This new enterprise will make a most valuable addition to the business interests of Friona. Mr. Maurer further states that he has already begun negotiations for his initial stock of shelf hardware and other commodities which will be handled by his company.

Elevator Improvements May Be Undertaken

Mr. Vance, of Enid, Oklahoma, spent a few days here this week on business connected with the Oklahoma-Texas Wheat Growers Association. Mr. Vance was here for the purpose of inspecting the elevator recently purchased from Gieseler & Son by the association and suggest improvements he believes should be made.

He reports a first class elevator plant so far as its equipment is concerned, but lacking in capacity and suggests considerable enlargement of the plant, which suggestion will evidently be approved and acted upon by the committee in charge locally.

In order to have this in readiness for the coming harvest it will be necessary to begin these improvements at once.

STORK-GRAM

NEXT TRADES DAY AT FRIONA, SATURDAY, JUNE 1, WILL BE FEATURED BY FREE AUCTION

BE CAREFUL OF SEWER DISPOSAL

Some complaint is being made that there are a number of open sewers from kitchen sinks in town where the drainage is allowed to flow out on the surface of the ground and as warm weather approaches this sewage soaks and creates a most unpleasant odor, as well as an unsanitary condition.

It will only take a few hours work to make a cess pool large enough to take care of this sewage and it will be well for parties having no receptacle for their kitchen sewage to prepare a cess pool for that purpose. In places where this sewage flows into an alley or passageway it will also keep the ground wet and soft so as to interfere with traffic.

Some open toilets still exist in the city which are also a menace to the health and comfort of the people and should be placed in sanitary condition and made fly-proof at once before really warm weather sets in. Surely all our people are interested in having a clean and healthful city to live in and should of their own accord take care of these conditions, which are not only a menace to the general health of our people but also a nuisance to their neighbors.

Farwell Motor Co. to Establish Friona House

The Farwell Motor Company, of Farwell, has leased the building now occupied by Grant Musick's garage and will install a stock of new cars there this week.

An addition is being built to the rear of the present structure in which Mr. Musick will continue his garage business while the front portion will be slightly remodeled and used as a display and sales room for the cars.

REV. PORTER RETURNS SATURDAY

Rev. and Mrs. Porter and their two little boys returned Saturday morning from a business and pleasure trip to El Paso, which consumed the greater part of last week.

Rev. Porter says they had no real trouble and a very pleasant trip, but business affairs consumed most of the two days which they were able to spend there, so that they had very little time for visiting with their relatives. He says the thermometer registered 92 when they left there, which was quite a decided change from the usually cool weather which prevailed here when they arrived.

LOOSE STOCK WILL BE IMPOUNDED

Friona's poundmaster, recently appointed by the city commission, is hewing strictly to the line in the performance of his duty and is impounding all stock found running at large within the city limits. Allowing stock to run at large is a violation of a state law and also of a city ordinance, and persons allowing their stock thus to do must stand whatever consequence may attach to such an act.

ENJOYED TRIP TO HOUSTON

Rev. J. L. Beattie, pastor of the Congregation church here, returned Saturday from a trip to Houston where he was in attendance at the State Association of Congregation churches.

Rev. Beattie says he enjoyed the trip and the sessions of the association and the work done there. He also made a number of friends and valued acquaintances while there and received considerable enthusiasm for his work locally.

OFF FOR VISIT

Mr. and Mrs. Buford Taylor, owners and proprietors of the City Cafe, departed Wednesday morning for a trip to Wichita Falls, Sulphur Springs, Commerce and Waco. They expect to be away about two weeks and the time will be spent visiting relatives and friends in these cities. They are making the trip in their car. During their absence the cafe will be under management of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Saunders.

Friona's next trades day will be held Saturday, June 1, which is Saturday of next week, and everybody should avail themselves of every opportunity of profit by it. In connection with this trades day there will be a free public auction for the benefit of any who may have any kind of property they may wish to dispose of, such as stock, farm machinery or implements, articles of household use, etc.

Homer Williams has been doing this kind of work for the people for some time, but he will hereafter be assisted by J. J. Taylor, who lives west of town and is a professional auctioneer. No charge will be made by either for their services as auctioneer and all persons having property they wish to sell at public auction are requested to have it in town on that day and to notify either Mr. Williams or Mr. Taylor of the fact and they will be on hand to do the work for them.

This is very kind of Messrs. Williams and Taylor, and they are doing this work simply as a community service. Remember the date, Saturday, June 1.

JUST A GOOD SOCIAL TIME

About sixty young people of the town and community gathered in the basement of the Congregational church Wednesday evening and enjoyed a few hours socially.

The occasion was the result of a contest among the young people of the community held during the revival services at the Methodist church a few weeks ago.

During those services the young people who attended were divided into two groups known as the Whites and Golds and the group making the fewest points during the meeting was elected to entertain the other group with a party or social.

At the final summing up at the close of the meeting it was found that the Whites were elected and the large number interested demanded a larger room than any of the dwellings in the community could boast of, so the social was held in the basement of the church.

The evening was spent in social games with cake and lemonade as refreshments and all present declared it a complete social success.

DRIVE THROUGH FROM IOWA

Misses Florence and Beulah Schlenker arrived here Thursday of last week from Iowa for a short visit with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schlenker, having driven through in their car.

These young ladies are well known in this locality, having spent their girlhood in the Friona community and both are graduates of the Friona high school.

They have been employed in Des Moines for the past few years, but have resigned their positions there and are now on their way to California and are stopping here for a short visit with their parents before proceeding on their westward journey.

On their way here from Iowa, they stopped in Wichita, Kansas, and got their mother who was visiting with relatives there and brought her home with them.

O. F. LANGE TO LLANO

O. F. Lange, manager of the Rockwell Bros. & Co. lumber yard at this place, departed Saturday evening for Llano, Texas, where he was called on account of the death of his mother, Mrs. B. Lange.

Mr. Lange had heard of the illness of his mother and had made arrangements to start to see her Saturday morning, but received word of her death before he got started. He had planned for Mrs. Lange to accompany him and they were to drive through in their car, but found the roads so bad from the rain which fell Friday and Friday night that they had not done many miles before they felt forced to give up the overland trip, and returned to Friona and Mr. Lange started alone by rail later in the day.

Mr. Lange has the sympathy of the entire community in this deep bereavement.

No Trailing Dampy Here

The postmaster at Dodge City, Kan., agrees that this is a day of skimpy dress. A woman handed him a parcel to be weighed for mailing. It was about four and a half inches wide and eight inches long. "What does this parcel contain?" was his routine question. "My daughter's party dress," the woman replied. The postage was four cents.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

—By— Wyndham Martyn

W. N. U. Service Copyright by Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains, Miss. Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life. Hanby engages Appleton as his agent. The Selenos mystery is explained. Smucker, out of a job after the loss of his position with Hanby, becomes embittered against him as the author of his misfortunes, and plans revenge.

He turned away and made for the bird sanctuary. The wire netting about it he climbed nimbly, and then unheeding thorns and brambles, he crept like the hunted thing he was to its black center. Suddenly he stepped into nothingness. He felt himself falling. Then came a blow, and he was no more aware of time and space.

When Tim Hanby, intent on adding a white owl to his collection, had carefully aimed his twenty-two at the creature as it sat on an elm branch, he had not been prepared for the extraordinary intervention that saved its life. As his finger caressed the trigger, there came a bloodcurdling scream, and some large animal had sprung from the base of the tree. Tim felt that it was no disgrace to flee immediately.

Hanby had not been near his office for two months. An hour's dictation cleared up his correspondence, and he went to the Hardware club for luncheon.

"Hello, Douglas!" he said, stopping at the table where an elderly, gray-haired man was sitting. "I called you up this morning, but you were busy."

"Glad to see you," Douglas replied heartily. "I've missed you. What's it like to be a landed proprietor?"

"The best life in the world," Hanby declared. "but a darned sight more to do than I thought. Why did you recommend me to buy those farms?"

"A sound investment. They'll be wanted for a country club some day. How are your improvements coming along?"

"They are finished, thanks to your admirable Appleton. Douglas, how could you let a jewel of a man like that go?"

There was a curious smile on the heavily lined face of the real estate man.

"So Appleton has been up there again, has he?" inquired Douglas.

"Again? What do you mean?"

"The Gray house holds some singular fascination for him—that's what I mean. You ask why I let him go. You call him a jewel. I did that for more than thirty years."

"And yet you refused to raise his pay, and struck some jackanapes over him. I thought you were a better business man than that."

"Tell me just what he said," Douglas returned.

He listened to Hanby in silence. "Now hear me," he resumed. "I fired Appleton. I didn't refuse to raise his pay, and I put nobody over him."

"You fired Appleton? Douglas, you must have been crazy! What for?"

"Ostensibly because he was drunk and impertinent."

"Appleton? Why, he never drinks!"

"Another reason was because he had deliberately misled me as to his family life. Yet a third was because he had manipulated accounts. I don't mean that he took money from me. I mean that he had robbed Peter to pay Paul. I mean specifically that for years he had been charging other clients for the money he used to effect repairs on the Gray house."

"On my house?"

Douglas nodded.

"For years he has been interested in your house—for the last ten years, anyway. Another thing—Southard called me up a month or so ago, to ask why I allowed a man like you, with a lovely family, to buy a house where people died from bad drains. For the last few years Appleton has kept clients from buying that house. You ask why. I can't explain. Ask Appleton. I did, and was told to go to h—l."

"The Appleton I mean is a man of sixty, plump, smiling, and married to an invalid to whom he is devoted. He calls himself Darby and his wife Joan."

were dead, so that he could marry the younger woman he runs around with."

Hanby put his hands to his head. "This is too much!" he murmured. "Remember, I had him in my house for a month."

"I had him for more than thirty years. Up to the time he met this musical comedy person—she must be forty now—he was a good husband. Now he takes the woman out to dance halls. He has money saved, but he's spending it. I have never been so utterly deceived in any one. His wife, who is religious, thinks he's possessed of a devil, and maybe she's right. She says he has any amount of money. I had his books examined, and he hasn't embezzled one cent. All he has done is to divert money from other houses to the upkeep and repair of the one you're in. You've no kick coming. He saved you money. What was he doing for you?"

Hanby explained. He told Douglas what his improvements had been, their cost, and the time in which they were executed. The real-estate man made calculations on the back of a menu card. Fortunately Hanby had exact particulars as to dimensions.

"Here's another puzzle!" said Douglas. "To complete the work in that time he must have worked many more men than you paid for. I know prices and labor scales in New York state. It amounts to this—he went up to you to get the very job you pressed on him. Why? Search me. Hanby—search me! Another thing—he must have paid for extra workmen out of his own pocket, so that he could get the work done by a certain time. Again you may search me!"

Hanby frowned.

"He may have wanted the workmen out of the premises for some purpose of his own."

"What purpose?" Douglas asked.

"How should I know? By the way, did you ever deny permission to a former tenant, a Miss Selenos, to go back and dig something up from the garden?"

"I denied her right to do some excavation. Appleton told me she was a maniac who wanted to bomb the place. I turned it over to him. Anything in what he said?"

Hanby told him of the affair of Miss Selenos and her pets.

"I don't mind admitting that Appleton has destroyed a lot of my faith in mankind," Douglas said presently. "He was the one man I would have wagered my soul on as being square and white."

"Ever see the woman?"

"That was how it all came out. I ran out of gas near Mineola, and had to go to a very third-rate roadhouse. There was Appleton, in a neat tuxedo, doing fancy steps with a good looking ex-actress. I looked at him very hard. I couldn't believe it was he." Douglas laughed a little. "He had the d-d insolence to say that if I annoyed his lady friend by making baby eyes at her, he'd knock my block off. Next morning he didn't try to make excuses. He had a hang-over, and he told me much of what he had conceded since 1890 or thereabouts. It appeared that he had all ways hated me and envied me my good luck. Douglas grew almost irritable. "No more about Appleton, or I'll change my table!"

Hanby did not get back to the Gray house until late. He said a few words to the younger people and then asked Dina and Bill to come to the library.

"I've had a great day," he announced. "Incidentally I have discovered that my judgment of character is no better, let's say, than Bill's."

"And me a house detective?" Bill cried. "Your reason totters!"

"We've all been deceived but Les."

"Les?" cried Dina. "Oh, Bill, you're joking! That boy?"

"Dina, light of my life," said Hanby. "if there is a more thoroughgoing old hellion than Mr. Frederick Darby Pickwick Appleton, let me learn his dissonant name. I've seen his Joan this afternoon, and I know what I'm talking about. Listen! I'll begin with what Douglas told me and then come to my interview with that poor crippled old woman."

"On my house?"

Douglas nodded.

"For years he has been interested in your house—for the last ten years, anyway. Another thing—Southard called me up a month or so ago, to ask why I allowed a man like you, with a lovely family, to buy a house where people died from bad drains. For the last few years Appleton has kept clients from buying that house. You ask why. I can't explain. Ask Appleton. I did, and was told to go to h—l."

"The Appleton I mean is a man of sixty, plump, smiling, and married to an invalid to whom he is devoted. He calls himself Darby and his wife Joan."

"That's my Appleton, too. I took it upon myself to see her. There was another illusion gone. She is an invalid, but as to being devoted, he tells her openly he wishes she were dead, so that he could marry the younger woman he runs around with."

Hanby put his hands to his head. "This is too much!" he murmured. "Remember, I had him in my house for a month."

"I had him for more than thirty years. Up to the time he met this musical comedy person—she must be forty now—he was a good husband. Now he takes the woman out to dance halls. He has money saved, but he's spending it. I have never been so utterly deceived in any one. His wife, who is religious, thinks he's possessed of a devil, and maybe she's right. "What purpose?" Douglas asked.

"How should I know? By the way, did you ever deny permission to a former tenant, a Miss Selenos, to go back and dig something up from the garden?"

"It seems impossible!" commented Dina, at the end of her husband's narrative.

"I begin to suspect myself," Bill murmured. "Appleton!"

"It took me that way when I first heard it, but it cannot be doubted. He came here to get the opportunity to be in and near this house, and to see what was going on. He has always been coming and going. I've heard something that may bear on it a little. I got it from Mrs. Appleton. Her brother was a very rich man, but he speculated and died in poverty. There were a few years when it looked as if she was going to be his heiress; and Appleton was going to use the legacy to buy the Gray house and make it a fashionable roadhouse. He said there was a fortune in it. Fishing, golf, swimming—everything that was needed for a residential hotel. Perhaps 'roadhouse' isn't just what he meant, but that was Mrs. Appleton's term."

"But if her brother died in poverty, where would he get the money to buy this place?" Bill asked.

"I don't know. I admit that it doesn't solve the question why he should still be interested in it. There is no solution, as far as I see, and yet we know that something is going on here, or something is planned to go on, and that we stand in the way and they want to remove us. I wonder if we ought to consult the police!"

"And get all kinds of notoriety! Oh, Bill, don't think of it! Nothing has happened—not even a tramp!"

"D—n it," said Hanby, "I'm a simple type. If I like people, I trust them absolutely. I go the limit for them, and they can have everything I've got. This gives me pause—what ever that means." He put his hand on his wife's arm. "Come and dance with me, Delliab, ere I challenge Bill to mortal combat!"

"Not a care in the world!" said Cella, a little later, watching her parents and talking intermittently to Les.

"Why should they have?" he answered. "Come to that, why should you have any cares?"

"Life bores me," the girl yawned.

"I talked like that in the beginning of my sophomore year. It used to make quite a hit. You've forgotten to ask what is life. I always did that."

"Les," she snapped, "I hate you! Your apperceptions are nebulous."

"That's a new one, I admit," he said. "I'll use it."

"To others girls?"

"Why not? If you won't have me, I must try my luck somewhere else."

"You have an attenuated soul substance, Les."

"Feed it with affection. It will expand."

"The main trouble with you is that you couldn't surprise me in any way. I know all your mental reactions. You never jump off the road. I could surprise you, Les, and I've a good mind to." Cella paused. "Perhaps I ought to tell you the whole romantic affair."

Leslie Barron looked at her, frowning. The word "romantic" spelled danger.

"Let the clutch in," he commanded.

"You are not the only man here," she said. "Last night, when you were playing pool with Bill, I went out to the swimming pool. It was midnight. I went out to pick some asphodel."

"What's that?"

"A romantic blossom to be found in most gardens of verse. Les, I met a most adorable, godlike man. He looked at me like a wild faun and then disappeared in a cloud of star dust."

There was something harder and more resolute about Leslie than Cella had ever seen before. She had an uneasy impression that there were depths in his nature as yet unplumbed by her; but she would not tell him so.

"Don't be rough," she said, and took her hand away from his. "Don't scowl at me so."

"Godlike strangers who disappear in star dust interest me," he said slowly. "I'd like to break his d-d neck!"

"But you couldn't," she answered. "He is much more splendid than you are."

"You admit talking to him?"

The young man's tone annoyed Cella.

"I admit nothing."

"I accuse you of talking to him," persisted Les, whose voice was husky. "Of course, if you listened," she said airily, "why should I deny it?" (TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE PLAIN FACTS

"Are you always careful to give the exact facts in your speeches?"

"Always," answered Senator Sorghum. "A process of careful elimination is necessary to accomplish this, and that's why I can occupy an hour or so in telling the members of an audience that we must uphold the Constitution, and that if we are good we will be happy."—Washington Star.

Mrs. Deming—That's nothing. My husband had the fever last summer, lost six months' time and it cost him him over $5,000.

Mrs. Carson—Gracious! What fever did he have?

Mrs. Deming—Golf!

Not a Political Reason

Mrs. Hoyle—I understand that you are trying to get voted for your husband for alderman.

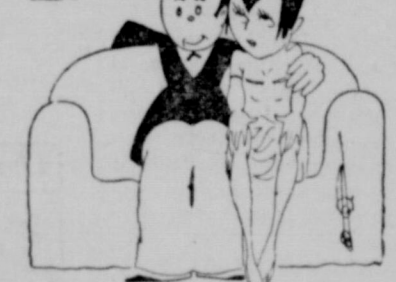

Mrs. Doyle—Yes, the board meets once a month and I would like to have 12 times in the year when he did not have to tell me a fish story regarding where he had spent the evening.

FOOD, PEN, MUD

"What is the trouble?" asked Brother Bacon, "did you get something in your foot?"

"No, there is nothing in my foot, of course not. How absurd! What makes you say or think anything so silly?"

"Because you were squealing, and I thought something might be hurting you."

"Something is," said Pinky Pig.

"What?" asked Brother Bacon.

"You, and the way you have of talking," granted Pinky, very bluntly.

"What's the matter with me? Didn't you like it because I said 'Good-morrow'? I was trying to be most cheerful."

"No, I didn't like it," said Pinky Pig. "You were putting on airs—and then you talked, just a little after that, of a greeting."

"Who wants to be greeted with words? Words, what are they?"

"Goodness only knows. I like to be greeted with food. Food is far finer than words."

"I like food myself," said Brother Bacon, "but at the same time I can have a pleasant talk."

"You're quite wrong, though, when you say I put on airs. I don't."

"Oh yes, you do," snapped Pinky Pig.

"No, Pinky, you are wrong," said Brother Bacon, "and I will explain to you how I know you are wrong."

"I can't put on airs because I am no relation of the winds."

"Now what under the sun and moon and stars and clouds has the fact that "Everything," said Brother Bacon, "you put on airs anything to do with being a relation of the winds?"

"Everything," said Brother Bacon. "I don't understand," said Pinky Pig. "I really don't believe you know what you are talking about."

"I will prove to you that I do," said Brother Bacon.

"Very well," agreed Pinky Pig. "As you didn't bring me anything to eat by way of greeting, I suppose I might as well hear your grunting conversation until something better turns up."

"You're not so very polite," said Brother Bacon.

"Perfect nuisance to be polite," said Pinky. "But I shall be polite enough to say I would like to have you explain yourself."

"That's true, too. I would like to hear you explain some of that nonsense."

"In the first place," said Brother Bacon, "you say it is quite impossible for me to explain that in order to put on airs I must be a relation of the winds."

"It is perfectly true. There is the north wind, which makes cold air, there is the south wind, which makes warm air. There are the other winds that make snowy air, rainy air, damp air, dry air."

"Isn't that true?"

"Yes," granted Pinky Pig.

"Well, I can't put on any of those airs. No, I can't put on any airs at all. Only those who are relations of the different winds can do that."

"Did you ever in your life hear of pig air?"

"No," agreed Pinky Pig.

"Well, so you see."

"Oh, very well," said Pinky Pig. "only don't talk that fine way to me. It's a waste of time, and I don't care a bit about it."

"There are only a few words I care a bit about. They will do for me. I don't need any more."

"Just let me grunt, or squeal, FOOD, PEN, MUD or maybe WEEDS, and I am quite, quite happy."

Make 'Em Laugh

Place an ordinary glass of water on the table and cover it with a hat. Now tell the crowd that you will drink the water in the glass without touching the hat. Can't be done, they say. But you place your head under the table and make a noise as though you were really drinking something. Then coming out from under the table, ask someone to lift the hat to see if the water is not gone. As they lift the hat you take up the glass and drink the water. Done!

Big Preparation for Bow Before Royalty

Presentation at court involves considerable preparation in advance, and those who have been favored with this honor must adhere strictly to the details of the program, says the London Graphic. A few minutes' lateness is unpardonable and would, in all likelihood, result in the disappointment of the candidate for royal honor, which would be a tragedy indeed after having undergone the long and tedious process of preparation. This often means a long string of carriages and automobiles forming for hours before the time set for the reception. Here the debutantes and others to be presented wait sometimes for as long as three hours till the time for entering the palace arrives. It is still daylight when the blockade of cars forms and swarms of curious people walk up and down the Mall close to the curb and gaze through the windows of the vehicles at the faces and gowns of the ladies in their court dress. The scrutiny is far from timid and casual, in many cases quite impudent.

Arrangement of Hair Marks Chinese Wife

It is customary in occidental lands for a married woman to wear a gold band on the third finger of her left hand. Not so in China. You know a married woman in China by the way her hair is trimmed above her brow.

Usually on the night before the wedding friends of the bride trim her hair. It is sometimes clipped and shaved, but in most cases the hair is removed with two twisted threads. These threads are rolled over the forehead with the fingers, the twist of the thread extracting the hair and giving the forehead a square appearance. If you can imagine what you would look like if your hair above the forehead were removed, leaving a clearing of, say, four inches long and one inch wide, you will have some idea of what the Chinese married woman's head is like.

After the marriage this must be done at intervals to keep the shape present.

Quail Die of Thirst

Dr. Joseph Grinnell, ornithologist of California, believes that lack of water explains the disappearance of quail in many parts of the state. He has made investigations and finds that areas formerly supplied with water are now dry owing to climatic changes and reclamation work and have become uninhabited as nesting grounds for the quail.

Doctor Grinnell does not believe that vermin has accounted for the disappearance of the birds so much as the lack of water, as the species of wild birds and animals designated as vermin also have become scarce during recent years in the same area. Young quail which are hatched more than 400 yards from water and where rain does not fall or heavy dews occur shortly after they are hatched will die from thirst, says a bulletin of the American Game association.

Bees Seldom Inactive

Honey bees do not go into a true state of hibernation during the winter but remain active within the hive, although they do not venture abroad, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. To keep warm, the colony practices a marvelous system of insulation and exercise. A large number of bees form a more or less spherical cluster, those on the outside having their bodies packed close to each other, parallel and with their heads up.

This formation constitutes an insulation shell. Inside, the other bees keep up a constant twisting and squirming motion to create heat. This is so effective that the temperature inside the shell seldom drops below 57 degrees Fahrenheit.

THE FUMBLE FAMILY

by Dunkel

I can not see why a woman or girl has not as good a right to wear short hair as the men.

Bobbed hair is surely much easier to care for than long hair and if bobbed properly looks much better than long hair and if the ladies want bobbed hair, I am for them.

Mrs. Elizabeth McLaughlin of Chicago, according to the Ochs-Lowe Herald, celebrated her 92nd birthday by having her hair bobbed. Her rule in life is "Live with high ideals and go along with the young and you'll never grow old."

A friend of mine has made the prediction that there will be only one generation of flappers. He says the girls the next generation will even be able to fool their mothers.

This friend also says that the young folk of this generation are just as capable and just as likely to take care of themselves as the young folk of any other generation have ever been.

I wonder why so many people when they reach the age of forty or fifty years cease trying to learn just as though they had learned everything.

No man has ever learned it all, nor ever will, but about ninety-five out of every hundred give up the effort just when they are at an age that they can really learn and appreciate it, and go into decline. Another friend of mine expressed it this way: "They just took along like a skiff floating down stream. They do not try to learn after they are forty-five."

MONEY TALKS

On May 30th, we pause to do honor to those who have passed on. The day was originally planned as a memorial to the Civil War dead, but its scope has been enlarged to include all who have answered the final roll call. —It is fitting that we bring our earliest blossoms as a tribute to those who so generously contributed to our national success and to our individual happiness.

A friend of mine, who is a contractor and builder, says contractors lose lots of money by hiring incompetent help. Instead of being a help they are a hindrance. When work has to be torn out and rebuilt time and labor are both lost.

A good citizen is one who obeys the laws of his town, his county, his state and his country. If a man obeys a law simply because he is afraid not to, he is not any better at heart than the man who violates the laws.

One man says he always keeps his men scattered while working in order to prevent arguments between them. Arguments, he says, in serve only to kill time and do no one any good. I have often contended that there is no good can come from an argument.

Important Ocean Fish

A sand dab is a reddish brown turbot (Hippoglossoides platessoides) of the deep waters of the North Atlantic, closely related to the halibut. It is useful for food, and is taken commonly on the coasts of Great Britain and Scandinavia and from Maine to Greenland. Two other species live in the North Pacific.

Seniority Gives Rank

Last week another "pearl" was added to the circle that is being gathered by the Nunn-Warren Publishing company, when Mr. and Mrs. Seth Holman turned over to that organization, all "right, true and sovereignty" in the Hereford Brand and Friona Star. For almost 12 years the Holmans have given the people of Hereford and Deaf Smith county an outstanding weekly paper, but continued ill health has made it imperative that Editor Holman take a long rest—and every newspaperman knows how impossible that is in the publishing business. It is with keen regret that the Panhandle fraternity sees the withdrawal from its number of so able and worthy a member and that regret is greater by reason of the cause. The speedy wishes for Mr. Holman's speedy restoration to health will follow the retiring publisher and his wife on their vacation and all hope that they may return to the Plains when that objective has been attained. Alger Jones of the Pampa Daily News and Archer Fullingim, of the Panhandle Herald, both Nunn-Warren publications, have been placed in charge of the Brand office. Southwest Plainsman, Amarillo.

GOD'S LOVE IN THE HEART

Jeremiah 31:29-34, John 1:17

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.
Sin cannot go unpunished and this punishment can be corrective rather than penal. Every effort had been made by Jeremiah to induce them to change their manner of living and so avert the captivity which must come to them because of their continuing sins.

Chapters 30-33 have a totally different tone from the harsh messages which this weeping prophet had been delivering. He had been talking with them as a nation. Now reference is made to the personal life which each individual should maintain and so receive blessings in accord with the right or wrong personally committed.

Such a message was especially encouraging to those in the nation who were standing with Jehovah in his effort to have the people as a whole change their ways. There are always many good people who do not yield to the pressure of a majority who may be eager to do evil. They protest by word and life. Jeremiah's changed message must have given them great joy and encouraged them to continue faithful unto the Jehovah of blessings.

The belief in the influence of heredity had been all but fatalistic. The day was coming when sour grapes eaten by the parents would no longer set the children's teeth on edge. Each was to be held responsible for his own deeds and therefore would have an individualistic nature. In the past the covenant had emphasized tribal my companions have that "fired feeling" and there are few who can work or play as long as I. What causes such physical lassitude in such different ages?

Maude L. Haskell County.

Fatigue is common to every age and occupation, affecting housekeepers and school pupils as well as factory workers and field hands. It is possible for just loafers to be sufferers from fatigue. Something is of course radically wrong when one gets too easily fatigued. Old and young should feel revived from a night's rest.

Some of the chief causes of fatigue are over-work, hunger, worry and hurry, bad air, insufficient rest and sleep, constipation and indigestion, lack of outdoor exercise, and onset of some infectious disease. If one cannot determine upon the cause and cannot banish undue fatigue, it is wise to have the advice of a physician.

and national relationships. The good must suffer with the evil as Babylonian bondage impended. God's goodness should have induced all to do better. Very tenderly they are reminded of the graciousness of Jehovah in leading them out of Egyptian bondage and establishing them in the Land of Promise. The symbol of a husband was used to suggest how loving the Father had always been to them.

In the past special attention had been called to the use of forms whereby one would approach the throne. Observation of these had failed in keeping the people in step with the onward moving God. The new covenant looks toward an enthroning of Him in the heart of each believer and follower. It is akin to the teaching of Paul: "Christ in you, the hope of glory." "In their heart will I write it" is the very intimate statement of the prophet.

for the bounty of the All-Father. The promises had been to Abraham and Moses, both personally and with reference to the Chosen People. Now the promises in the new covenant is to be as extensive as its humanity. "Neighbor" always has a limitation. At the best it did not extend very far beyond the Twelve Tribes. The future horizon of covenant blessing was to be a world brotherhood. "For they shall all know me, from the least of them even unto the greatest." Forgiveness is as extensive as the promise of fellowship. All this was fulfilled as is recorded by John who declared "For the law was given through Moses; grace and truth came through Jesus Christ."

Memorial Day, 1929

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE ENLISTED in a Pennsylvania regiment in June, 1775, and marched to the siege of Boston. He followed Montgomery to Quebec, and starved and froze amid the snows of Canada. Wearing the Continental Buff and Blue, he fought under Washington at Trenton and at Princeton, and in the summer of 1777 he went with Dan'l Morgan to repel Burgoyne's invasion of New York.

At Saratoga the bayonet thrust of a Hessian grenadier struck him down. What if the historians of the future were to call this conflict, whose din was now sounding faintly in his ears, one of "the fifteen decisive battles of the world?" He was conscious only of the torture of thirst as his life-blood ebbed swiftly away until death finally stilled his cry of "Water! Water!" A great monument stands on the spot which once witnessed the "pomp and circumstance of war"—the surrender of a British army. But, nearby, the smooth, green sod gives no sign that the soil beneath holds the dust of a young Pennsylvania backwoodsman, one of the many who died in defense of American liberty. Who was he? Just an Unknown Soldier of the Revolution!

Before the ink on his enlistment papers in the First Infantry was scarcely dry, another boy, who had never before been beyond the confines of the rock-strewn acres of the little New England farm where he was born, was on his way to the western frontier, there to serve in a lonely outpost called Fort Dearborn. It was as though he were on another planet, so far as communication with the world he had known was concerned. But somehow he managed to live through the cold, desolate winters and the hot, fever-breeding summers amid the swamps along the Chicago river.

With the summer of 1812 came the news of war with Great Britain, and, more alarming still, the threat of an Indian outbreak. Then—orders to evacuate Fort Dearborn.

One hot August day the retreat began. From out of the sandhills along Lake Michigan swooped the fierce Pottawatomes. A short, desperate fight and the Fort Dearborn massacre was history. That night there was a hellish orgy in the Indian camp and the pitying stars looked down upon a writhing figure at the stake. What if this was one of the acts in the mighty drama called "the Winning of the West"? What if the future was to see one of the world's greatest cities rise on these sandy shores? Could that knowledge have been recompense for the fiery agony of this New England lad above whose unmarked grave the hurrying feet of Chicago's millions today beat an endless requiem? Who was he? An Unknown Soldier of the War of 1812!

Though some of his neighbors denounced it as an "unholy war" into which President Polk was leading the nation, a certain Middle Western farm boy was one of the first to respond when the President on May 13, 1846, called for 50,000 volunteers to drive the Mexicans back across the Rio Grande. And so he was among those who landed with "Old Fuss and Feathers" Scott at Vera Cruz and started toward the City of Mexico. To his parents back in Ohio came cheerful letters from the boy, telling of the rapid succession of victories won by the American army and assuring them that the war was almost over and that he would soon be home. His last letter was written the night before Scott's soldiers stormed Chapultepec. The boy's parents awaited his return in vain. Today in the environs of the City of Mexico there is a little cemetery in which stands a small granite shaft bearing these words: "To the memory of the American soldiers who perished in this valley in 1847, whose bones, collected by the country's orders, are here buried.—750." And so this Unknown Soldier of the Mexican war sleeps among the 750 in alien soil.

Fort Sumter had been fired upon. In the upper Shenandoah valley of Virginia a father was bidding goodbye to his two sons. "Pray God, you two never meet in battle," he said. And one rode north to wear the Federal Blue under General Patterson and the other rode south to become a member of Gen. Thomas J. Jack-

The Dead
Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!
There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But dying, has made us richer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away;
poured out the red,
Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be
Of work and joy; and that un-
hoped serene,
That men call age; and those who would have been,
Their sons, they gave, their immortality.
Blow, bugles, blow! They brought us, far our dearth,
Holiness, lacked so long, and
Love, and Pain.
Honor has come back, as a king,
to earth,
And paid his subjects with a royal wage,
And Nobleness walks in our ways again;
And we have come into our heritage.
—Rupert Brooke.

son's "Stonewall Brigade." Whether or not his prayer was answered, the father never knew. He never saw either again.
Perhaps in some Valhalla two warrior spirits reminisce of Chancellorsville and Antietam, of Manassas and Malvern Hill but there is no bitterness in their tones as they call each other "Yank" and "Johnny Reb." The crumbling dust of the bodies which once housed these spirits rests under a great monument of rough-hewn granite and polished marble in Arlington cemetery near Washington, D. C. on this monument is an inscription which reads:
"Beneath this stone repose the bones of 2,111 unknown soldiers gathered after the war from the fields of Bull Run and the route to the Rappahannock. Their remains could not be identified but their names and deaths are recorded in the archives of their country; and its grateful citizens honor them as of their noble army of martyrs. May they rest in peace."
It was the spring of 1868. A Colorado miner, coming off the night shift, joined a group of his fellows gathered about one who read in a Denver paper the headlines: "War With Spain." A month later he was on an army transport that steamed through the Golden Gate into the broad Pacific. The next year he was one of a detachment which set out through the Philippine jungle in pursuit of a party of Moro raiders. There was a deathlike hush as they pushed on through the steaming heat of the jungle. A moment later its stillness was shattered by the sounds of men engaged in furious hand-to-hand combat, bayonet against bolo, a swarm of little brown men clanking at a group of swearing, desperately-struggling khaki-clad figures and bearing them down to earth by sheer force of numbers. A few months later back in the Colorado mining town a band played "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," for the troop of "our boys" was home from the wars. But out in the province of Sulu a rusted Krag-Jorgensen and a webbed cartridge belt already nearly hidden by the lush jungle vegetation, marked the last resting place of one who didn't come home—an Unknown Soldier of '98-'99.

November 11, 1922. In Arlington cemetery a great throng stood with bared heads as a bugler blew "Taps" over a new white marble tomb in which had been placed the body of a dead warrior. Of him it has been written, "Once he trod our streets—perhaps the very pavements which we daily travel. It never entered his head that he would become a symbol of sacrifice and his tomb a shrine of pilgrimage. If any one had foretold as much to him, how he would have laughed! If anyone were to reveal to us who he really was—that he had been a cashier in a New York bank or a taxi driver in Chicago—would he still retain his power so deeply to move us? Who was he, this Unknown Soldier, whom we have exalted out of humanity into sainthood?"
That question of identity can never be answered. But of him this can be said: since that day seven years ago Memorial Day has had a new meaning. On this day his tomb is a shrine before which in spirit all Americans bow reverent heads. For thus they honor not only the Unknown Soldier of the World War but the Unknown Soldiers of all of our wars—the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican war, the Civil war, the Spanish-American war. We cannot decorate their graves in accordance with the Memorial Day custom, for their last resting places, unmarked, are scattered far and wide over the face of the globe. Some of them fell before Indian bullet and lance on the wind-swept plains of the Great West. Some of them died in China, in the Philippines, in Mexico. Some of them "went West" on the battlefields of France and Belgium.
So in alien soil they keep their lonely "divorce of the dead" and while we cannot pay them the same honors on Memorial Day that we do the others who gave their lives for their country, we can offer up to them our tribute of gratitude by remembering on that day what they did even though we do not know who they were.

Man's Uppermost Thought
Whoever one may read into the name of patriotism, however variously the citizens of a nation may love their land, with whatever admixture of criticism and doubt they yield their support, love of home and fellowship with one's own people remain the common lot. Man cannot escape them if he would. The beat of their drum is in his blood, and their memories march as banners in a lasting parade.
He who hesitates is helped.

Day for Thoughts of Peace
Memorial day is no longer a day for the recollection of martial times alone. It is a day given less and less to parades, the salutes of guns, the clank of swords. It is a day given more and more to quiet and individual strengthening of that "bridge of love" that stretches from the dead to those who live. It is a day set aside for memory. When the new and shining link of World war veterans grows

TOOTHPICKS AND ROMANCE

(By D. J. Walsh.)
PHYLLIS, brown-eyed and slender, had ideals, inherited from the romantic, semi-invalid mother who named her Phyllis May. But there was little time for the nurturing of ideals in the Gregory household. Phyllis began work at fourteen, standing on her feet all day behind the counter in a 10-cent store and dragging her weary body to school three nights a week. By the time she was eighteen she had finished night high school and mastered shorthand and typewriting. Now, at nineteen, she had secured her first stenographic position and was beginning to feel that her feet were firmly set at last on the first round of the ladder of success.

From her couch in the front room Mrs. Gregory nominally supervised the household. "Tim, you must wash your hands more carefully. They are positively grimy. And your nails—" "Aw, for Pete's sake, mother," and the overgrown sixteen-year-old boy would look guiltily at the offending nails, then awkwardly pat his mother's thin shoulder. "What with you and Phil, I don't never get no peace!" "And you studied grammar at school," Phyllis would exclaim, disgustedly.

"Grammar don't mean anything," he retorted. "It's what you do, not what you say, that counts."
Phyllis had to admit that he was right fundamentally. "But still," she insisted, "being able to talk correctly indicates good breeding."
"Sure, and I'm a well-bred plumber's assistant," he boasted, closing the argument.

Phyllis hated Tim's work. To her it was dirty in every sense of the word. But he had been forced to accept anything he could get. He speedily found something intriguing about bathroom fixtures, and boasted that one day he would be a millionaire plumber and live in a porcelain-lined home.
But with the entry of Curtis Ashe into Phyllis' life minor worries were forgotten. Young and good looking, with that well-groomed air that women so admire, he seemed the materialization of all she had dreamed. Curtis was one of the richest customers of Harvie Bros., where she was employed. He came into the office occasionally to talk with Mr. Harvie, and after a few casual chats with Phyllis came oftener, invited her to lunch and even suggested dinner and the theater.

Phyllis accepted the luncheon invitations and eventually the theater, but she declined to take dinner with him. "It's my only meal with mother," she explained, "and she looks forward to it."
"I should think your brother could entertain her for once," Curtis grumbled.
"I also prepare the dinner," she laughingly replied.
Curtis had smiled, she thought with annoyed surprise. "I'd like to meet your mother," he said presently.

Phyllis felt herself flushing hotly. "Mother would be delighted to have you take dinner with us one evening," she suggested, diffidently.
Curtis accepted with alacrity, and Phyllis did her best with the dinner. She was not ashamed of the apartment. It was comfortable and tastefully if not expensively furnished. Her mother had a real Irish linen tablecloth, relic of better days, and the old mahogany sideboard. Incongruously massive, gave dignity to the dining room. Tim consented, with some urging, to scrub his nails clean for once.
But good-natured, well-meaning Tim almost spoiled things in the end. The dinner, from roast chicken to homemade ice cream and caramel cake, had been perfect. Curtis had become genial and expansive, Phyllis was very happy. Before they left the table Tim looked around inquiringly, then rose and rummaged through the kitchen cabinet. He came back with what he sought. "Sis forgot to put them on the table."

"No, no thank you," Curtis waved them away with a strained expression. Tim helped himself. "Take one, sis," he invited.
After her guest had gone Phyllis gave way to angry tears. "He'll think we're common and don't know anything," she sobbed.
"If he really cares for you he won't notice a little slip like that," Mrs. Gregory tried to comfort her. Tim, staring at his carefully scrubbed nails, said nothing.

A month passed and Curtis showed unmistakably that a little matter of toothpicks could not come between him and his love. Shy and tremulous, Phyllis crept into her mother's arms to tell the wonderful news. "Curtis loves me. He wants to be married right away."
"You deserve the best," her romantic mother answered, satisfied.
Then came plans for the wedding and afterwards. "We'll take a short trip," Curtis had said, pressing her dark head against his shoulder. "I'm buying you the home you admired in Lakeview."
"A real home, at last!" breathed Phyllis.

"Just we two," and Curtis' arms tightened. Phyllis tensed suddenly, and a stab of fear pierced her heart. "You forget mother, Curtis," she whispered, brushing her lips lightly across his.
"No, I've thought it all out. She and Tim can keep the apartment, and I'll engage a good reliable woman to come in every day and take charge."

"But," Phyllis remonstrated aghast, "a maid can't take my place with mother. It would take all the joy out of her life if—she didn't live with us! And Tim—" she stopped, her voice thick with tears.
"You'll decide differently after you think it over," he declared. "Trust to my judgment, Phyllis."
But in this one matter she stood firm, and for days the silent battle of wills continued. Phyllis loved Curtis passionately; life without him would be an arid desert. But her mother needed her! The girl moved through the daily routine with a sense of unreality. There were faint smudges under her eyes that told of sleepless nights, but her mechanical set smile never faltered.

A week passed, torturing hours in which self-sufficient Curtis found how wholly and completely love had taken possession of him. It could no more be uprooted than could his very heart be torn from his bosom. And all this anguish was because a delicate old lady and a hardworking boy would be in the way in his new fourteen-room home.
Curtis resolutely got out of bed. He had been a fool, he realized. Snapping on the lights, he wrote a note—tore it up—tried again till one satisfied him. Then he telephoned for a messenger. "He's to be here by seven o'clock," he instructed the sleepy-voiced operator. "The letter I'm sending is of vital importance!" Then Curtis returned to bed, and slept soundly for the first time in a week.

Phyllis, too, was asleep, with tear stains on her cheeks, but peace in her heart. For earlier that night Mrs. Gregory had called her daughter. She was embarrassed and fearful, but determined. What Phyllis finally understood from her mother's rather incoherent words was this: Mrs. Gregory didn't want to live with Phyllis and Curtis! She didn't want to give up the freedom of her tiny apartment. "I hate for us to be separated, but you will have Curtis," Mrs. Gregory sobbed.

"Yes—Curtis," bewildered Phyllis half whispered.
"Besides," Mrs. Gregory was holding her daughter's hands tightly. "I can take better care of Timmy here, and the neighbors can come in during the day and gossip a bit, as they've always done, and I'll feel—well—independent."
"Whatever will make you happiest," Phyllis managed to say.

"And," Mrs. Gregory half laughed, shamefacedly, "Timmy and I both like to keep toothpicks on the table."
New York Pet Garage
Profitable to Owner
There is a little place in the fifties in New York where women who come to shop on Fifth avenue or to see a play on Broadway can park their dogs.

The storage fee for an afternoon or an evening is 50 cents, and it is a dull day that doesn't find half a dozen pets parked in cages along the floor, with very businesslike tags on the doors to identify them.
Running a pet garage is so profitable, in fact, that Charles King, the proprietor, now keeps his place open until midnight for the benefit of evening patrons, although his major vocation is the daytime job of beautifying dogs and cats.
Most of the New York hotels permit visitors to check dogs and cats at the coatroom, and during an afternoon tea it is not unusual to find a dozen Pekes and Griffons and Pomeranians drowsing on their leashes among parcels and parasols in a hotel checkroom. But many a matron prefers the super-luxury of a stall in a pet garage for her pedigreed pet.
As to king's canine and feline beauty parlor business, it consists not only of a haircutting and manicuring and eyebrow plucking, but also of dry-cleaning cats, and administering violet-ray treatment to pets which are overfat or rheumatic. The violet-ray treatment costs $50, and the dry-cleaning process, which King says he learned from a Hindu in Paris during the war, and which spares a cat the washing which all cats hate, is administered for $5.

Wonders of the Dusky Land
Carveth Wells, a British traveler and scientist, has seen many wonderful things in the course of his career through the countries of Africa and other out-of-the-way spots. On his return from the Mountains of the Moon he tells among the other strange things he noted was an elephant with tusks so enormous that they trailed before him along the ground. At least he found his tracks, the marks of four feet and, running always with them, two parallel grooves which could have been made by nothing else than his tusks. On another occasion he saw a herd of gnus and zebras which he estimated to be 30 miles wide and 5 miles deep. He saw them passing below him one morning and, camping at the same spot three days later, he saw them still passing.

First Stamp Primitive
The first postage stamp is said to have been used in Paris in 1653. It took the form of a receipt printed on the wrappers in which letters were sent, and was originated by a Frenchman named Velayer.

"Kid" Nichols Was Real "Iron Man"

When the great pitchers of baseball are discussed, the names of Christy Mathewson, Walter Johnson, Grover Alexander, Cy Young, Ames Rusie, Tim Keefe, John Clarkson, Charley Radbourne and others of equal skill invariably are mentioned, writes Joe Vila of the New York Sun. But there was one pitcher in the days of the National league's 12-club circuit who must be ranked with the best. Charley (Kid) Nichols of Frank Selee's champion Boston established a wonderful record, which seldom has received notice.

Nichols was the leading pitcher of the Bostonians when they won the pennants—in 1891, 1892, 1893, 1897 and 1898. During these victorious campaigns he pitched 228 complete games, winning 158 and losing 70, a percentage of .700. In 1894, 1895 and 1896 his yearly winning percentage was not so high. But he averaged 40 games a year.

Nichols in 1891 pitched 47 games without being relieved and won 30. His record in 1892 was 35 victories and 16 defeats, in 1893 32 and 14, in 1897 30 and 11, and in 1898 31 and 12.

Winning 30 or more games in the National league seasons for the same team is a record hung up by Nichols, which never has been surpassed.

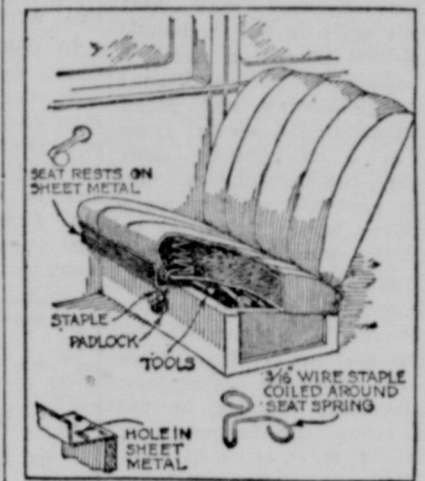

About five feet ten inches tall and weighing 165 pounds, Nichols was noted for his speed-ball delivery. In fact, during his entire career he depended chiefly on speed and a sharply breaking curve ball, which he controlled with remarkable skill.

Nichols in 1894 figured in a memorable pitching duel with Ames Rusie at the Polo grounds, then located on the vacant lot next to the Giants' present home. The game went into extra innings, with the score nothing to nothing, until the late Mike Tierman ended the struggle with a long home-run drive over the right field fence. Nichols and Rusie, thereafter, hooked up in numerous tests of skill with honors about even.

Compartment Lock Will Hold Car Tools Safely

A common location for the tool compartment in the sedan or coach is under the front seat. Usually it is necessary to raise the front of the seat cushion and pull it forward in order to lift it out to get at the tools.

By Preventing Lifting of the Seat, This Lock Safeguards the Contents of Your Tool Compartment.

You can fit a lock, as shown, that will prevent lifting the front edge of the seat cushion and thus prevent the theft or unauthorized use of your tools when the car is stored in a public garage.—Popular Science Monthly.

MOTOR QUIZ

(How Many Can You Answer?)

Q.—When was the first transcontinental auto trip made?

Ans.—In 1903 from the Pacific coast to Boston. Actual running time was 47 1/2 days.

Q.—What is the "breaking in" period for a new car?

Ans.—Usually the first 500 miles.

Q.—What care should be exercised with a new car?

Ans.—The maximum speed should be 20 to 25 miles per hour. Up to 1,000 and 1,500 miles a new automobile should be driven at a reasonable rate of speed. After the first 500 miles when the engine is warm, accelerate up to 40 miles occasionally, but as soon as the speedometer registers 40 or 45 miles, slow down to 30 or 35. This will cause the oil to circulate freely among the working parts. It is advisable to have the dealer check up the car after the first 1,000 miles.

Q.—Why are air cleaners used on so many cars?

Ans.—It removes dust and dirt from the carburetor intake air, thereby eliminating abnormal engine wear. Road dust, mixing with oil film on cylinder walls and other parts, would form a grinding compound and cause excessive wear.

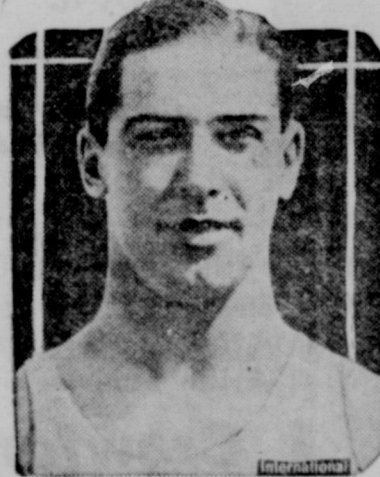

The main causes of premature tire ruin are: driving with wheels out of alignment, needless high speed, faulty use of brakes and improper inflation.

Paradoxically, the more the automobile is improved the harder it becomes on tires. Four-wheel brakes will stop a car almost as short as a stone wall, but they wear down tires at an appalling rate if they are habitually slapped on at high speed. Unevenly adjusted brakes scuff out tires as a small boy scuffs out shoes.

Increased speed also is hard on tires, yet the more cars in use the faster traffic must be kept moving, and the greater the wear on tires in slowing down and stopping. Recent tests have shown that a car driven at 35 miles an hour and stopped every quarter mile wore the tread design on a standard tire entirely away in a little more than 100 miles. Stopped only every mile, the tread lasted 3,000 miles.

The one important factor in tire wear that is completely under the control of the man at the wheel is inflation. Experiments made with identical tires on identical cars, one set properly inflated and the other only six pounds under-inflated, showed that firm tires lasted one-quarter longer.

Paul Heydrick, Potomac (W. Va.) high school boy, whose almost unbelievable track feats have earned him the title of "the one man track team." The mountaineer boy is a first place man in the high jump, pole vault, broad jump, hammer and discus throw and the javelin event. In a recent meet with Penn State college trackmen he scored 33 points.

Caring for Tires Is Not Simple Task

If American motorists gave their motor car tires as much care as they give their own shoes they would save hundreds of millions of dollars they now waste through carelessness. Experts say almost every driver wears out the equivalent of a tire a year because he does not observe simple rules which not only prolong the life of his casings but make for easier riding.

The main causes of premature tire ruin are: driving with wheels out of alignment, needless high speed, faulty use of brakes and improper inflation.

Paradoxically, the more the automobile is improved the harder it becomes on tires. Four-wheel brakes will stop a car almost as short as a stone wall, but they wear down tires at an appalling rate if they are habitually slapped on at high speed. Unevenly adjusted brakes scuff out tires as a small boy scuffs out shoes.

Increased speed also is hard on tires, yet the more cars in use the faster traffic must be kept moving, and the greater the wear on tires in slowing down and stopping. Recent tests have shown that a car driven at 35 miles an hour and stopped every quarter mile wore the tread design on a standard tire entirely away in a little more than 100 miles. Stopped only every mile, the tread lasted 3,000 miles.

The one important factor in tire wear that is completely under the control of the man at the wheel is inflation. Experiments made with identical tires on identical cars, one set properly inflated and the other only six pounds under-inflated, showed that firm tires lasted one-quarter longer.

The main causes of premature tire ruin are: driving with wheels out of alignment, needless high speed, faulty use of brakes and improper inflation.

Modern Hurling Is Soft

Says Old Pirate Star The one and only Hans Wagner, declared by many to be the greatest shortstop of all time, is strong for the old-timers of the diamond sport. Speaking of the lively ball, Wagner says it isn't the only advantage recorded present-day batters. He says the pitching isn't so good as it was when he was in his heyday.

"Hit 300 against the pitchers of those days and you could hit 400 against the pitching of today," he avers. "Mathewson knew more in five minutes about hitting than the modern pitcher knows in a whole season. He would never give you a ball in the spot where he knew you could hit."

Woman Fight Manager

Mrs. Edna Greiner of Detroit, who is distinguished as being the first woman fight manager in the United States. In her stable of pugilists is her first cousin, Frankie Mack, whom she declares is bound to become the next featherweight champion of the world. Besides Mack she has two other battlers on her string.

Bucky Harris Is Natural Leader

AS ONE gads about meeting good athletes who will be around later and some who will be elsewhere later, it is an every day occurrence to encounter the opinion that "Detroit is going to be pretty good this year," writes Irving Vaughan in the Chicago Tribune.

Such expressions naturally are questioned, and in the course of the questioning, you learn that the lone excuse for the optimism is that Harris is the Tiger leader.

It is apparent that Harris as a manager stands high not only among the mill run of players but also among the stars and even the rival pilots. The impression prevails that the ex-manager of the Washington troops is a natural leader who can lead without irritating.

This idea sprang up in 1924 when the boylike Bucky sent the Washingtons galloping into a world's championship and was perpetuated when he followed with a pennant in 1925. Later he didn't go quite so well, at least Owner Griffith thought so and gave him his papers, but with the rank and file Harris remains the little hero who can't go wrong.

Bucky Harris.

The Harris boosters undoubtedly are sincere, but there are things about Bucky's present situation that are more weighty than past performances. For one thing, Harris enjoyed his greatest managerial successes when he was on the ball field playing every day, and age now has taken from him the ability that made him good enough for regular work. It will be recalled that Eddie Collins managed capably while playing, but fell down when he tried to lead from the bench. Another item to consider is that Harris is not going to have a whole of a team unless unexpected help develops.

What Harris is going to need is a quantity of pitching strength. For years pitching has been a chronic weakness of Detroit teams. The hitters always were there but not the hurlers. To heal up this old wound it will be necessary for George Uhle to come back and pitch as he did when at the top of his career with the Indians. There is reason to suspect he can't do this. And even if Uhle is able to work regularly, he will have to be surrounded by at least three others good enough to take a turn and two or three more who can fill in.

Reliable Houses Best for Seeds

Gardener Should Know Something of Trade and Various Methods.

Vegetable gardeners should be careful to purchase their seed from widely known, reliable seed dealers only. This precaution is urged by A. M. Binkley, associate professor of horticulture at the Colorado Agricultural college.

To buy seed intelligently, the gardener should know something of the seed trade and of the methods and conditions under which it operates. This business, like many others, Mr. Binkley says, is somewhat dependent upon the character of the men in it, and it is therefore necessary to know the reputation of the concern with which one proposes to do business.

Know Seed Dealer.

Not all seed is produced under careful methods and no seed house handling a general line of vegetable seed can grow all of its supplies. A few grow a large proportion, and some buy it all. The buyer should know or become personally acquainted with local seed dealers and ascertain their standards of business.

The best companies are extremely careful in buying and handling, and are earnestly seeking to satisfy reasonable expectations. It costs more money to produce high grade seed, and as long as the planters are willing to buy seed from the lowest bidder, there is no inducement for the seed producer to exercise a high degree of care in the selection of better seed stocks.

Pay for Quality.

While high priced seed is not always a guarantee of quality, it is not often that carefully selected stocks can be sold at the price of cull stock. The vegetable grower should be willing to pay for quality in seeds.

Inquiries concerning the origin of the seed to be purchased should be made. One should also learn to judge whether statements made in seed catalogs are based on facts or mere opinions.

Feeding Brood Sow to Keep Her in Condition

In feeding the brood sow, it should be borne in mind that there are some factors to be considered that do not arise in feeding hogs for market. Not only must the sow be properly nourished to keep her in good condition, but provision must be made for the unborn pigs by providing feeds of muscle and bone-building character. Such feeds as shorts, middlings, oil-meal, tankage, ground oats, alfalfa meal, and skim milk fed in connection with corn will usually give good results. Barley may be substituted for all or part of the corn, particularly if there is a tendency on the part of the sow to become too fat. It is impossible to say definitely what feeds are best and in what proportions they should be used, as the feeder must be guided by the condition of his sows. Young sows will require relatively more protein than older sows.

Early Pulletts for Eggs Are Quite Satisfactory

A more satisfactory winter egg production will be obtained from early hatched, vigorous, and well-grown pullets that carry a surplus of flesh. Late hatched, slow-maturing pullets should be culled from the laying flock and only the well-grown birds of desirable type should be kept. The culling out of the late hatched pullets removes one of the most common sources of roup infection and may tend to prevent the disease from gaining a foothold in the flock.

Agricultural Squibs

Sweet clover should be sown in the spring.

Another agricultural surplus which hurts the farmer is the surplus of low quality produce.

Leaving machinery standing outdoors increases farm expenses and cuts down profits.

Good seed potatoes are one of the most important factors in securing maximum yields of tubers.

Don't plant onions two years in the same place if you are growing them for the bulbs. With young onions it makes no difference.

A planter can handle good seed as well or better than poor seed; it takes just as long to plant either kind. But, oh, the difference at harvest.

Flax is not likely to prove satisfactory on fields which are weedy. New breaking is, therefore, a particularly good place to grow this crop.

Success in co-operative marketing associations depends primarily on sufficient volume, efficient management, and loyalty of members, says North Dakota bulletin.

In the New England states apple trees are sometimes severely damaged by partridges, which eat the buds. Sometimes the damage is said to be great enough to kill the trees.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhoea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

Nation's Paint Bill The paint bill of the United States during 1927 reached the tremendous total of $510,000,842, according to a census of manufacture taken by the Department of Commerce. More than 1,000 establishments were engaged in the manufacture of paints and varnishes, and a total of 28,061 wage earners, other than salaried employees, were engaged in turning out the product. New York state led, with 102 plants engaged in the business, and Illinois ran second with 103.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings. The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulency, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

150 club members of Deaf Smith county and many visitors from Hereford, Amarillo and other Panhandle towns. The picnic was held at Sulphur Park about six miles east on Tierra Blanco creek. The club members gathered early at the R. B. R. place of business and several large trucks conveyed the boys and girls to the park.

Before the huge dinner was served the children enjoyed games of various sorts. The barbecue and coffee was prepared by Chef Henry Cloyd and the big crowd was served in cafeteria style. Following lunch the picnicers were grouped on the hillside and photographs were taken.

Various addresses were made in the afternoon by men prominent in agricultural activities over the Panhandle. R. O. Dunkle presided.

The first speaker, T. E. Seigler complimented the clubs for having such a large representation at the meeting. S. P. Rosson, a member of the R. B. R. firm, stated his company is always glad to promote any agricultural project that will benefit the boys and girls. He said his company fees it a privilege to be the host at an annual 4-H club picnic which is growing larger every year.

Henry Ainsley of the Amarillo Globe-News declared that "this is the only place in the Panhandle where picnics of this nature are annual affairs." He mentioned that the Globe-News and Santa Fe are sponsoring a special train to the A. & M. College short course this coming summer. He urged the boys and girls to make arrangements to go to A. & M. and take the course.

W. T. Wheeler, representing the Amarillo office of the International Harvester Co., encouraged the club members to continue their club work with the enthusiasm they have been showing in the last few years. He invited them to visit the I. H. C. office in Amarillo and investigate the extension service that is being offered to farm boys and girls.

J. F. Ford, assistant county agent of Potter county, said that it takes a keen business man of the highest type to be a successful farmer. Mr. Ford specializes in baby beef club work in almost every county in the Panhandle. D. G. Murrely of Enid, Okla., an old-timer here, advised the boys and girls to study marketing.

H. M. "Ham" Luna of Amarillo, representing the Panhandle Plains, Inc., whose object is to bring more farmers to the Panhandle, asked the boys and girls to cooperate with the county agent and business men in collecting agricultural exhibits to use in fairs throughout the Middle West this fall. He explained the exhibits should be the best, since they advertise the Panhandle-Plains section of Texas. Roy Gough welcomed the club members and visitors to Sulphur Park and invited them back again next year.

Judge Earl W. Wilson and Elizabeth Chapman of Simms community, were other speakers. Miss Chapman reminded the club members that the Kelleher Medal will be awarded again this year and urged them to make a great effort to win this coveted prize.

Following the speeches, J. W. Olson entertained the crowd with acrobatic stunts. T. E. Seigler instructed the boys and girls how to catch fish by catching a few large minnows himself.

Henry Ainsley entertained the crowd with clever exhibitions of trick roping, talking the white like Will Rogers.

In point of attendance and interest taken, the picnic was the best ever sponsored by the R. B. R. The importance with which it is regarded by agricultural leaders is demonstrated by the attendance of Mr. Ainsley, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Luna, Mr. Ford and other agricultural leaders of the Panhandle.

The R. B. R. Company was praised for sponsoring a picnic that brought almost every club member in the county together, giving the boys and girls an opportunity to hear prominent agriculturists talk and to learn from each other about club activities.

Texas & Texans

By WILL H. MAYES

The country should be as much interested in beautification programs as the towns and cities. One reason so many people are leaving the country is because so little is being done to make country life attractive. In Delta county three hundred women have enlisted in a two-year yard beautifying contest, which is to include planning, setting out trees and making flower beds and walks. From this the next step is repairing and painting fences and outhouses and even the farm homes. It will be remembered that it is worth while to watch the results of this work by the three hundred women. Already great transformations have been worked on many of the farms.

Put 4 cups strong beef stock and 2 cups rich milk in double boiler and let simmer five minutes. Add seasoning to taste, thickening with paste made of 1 tablespoon flour dissolved in cold milk; stir until it thickens. Add two well beaten eggs and cook 5 minutes longer, stirring all the while. Serve very hot, garnished with chopped parsley and cheese straws.

Westway Items

A program prepared had to be abandoned because of rain. Mr. and Mrs. Keesee and baby left on Tuesday to visit with her parents before taking up their school work in Canyon this summer. Miss Myers has gone to Amarillo for a visit with her brother before going home. We regret to lose our teachers, and they have made many friends here.

Several social affairs honoring the teachers were given. Mr. and Mrs. Hartman entertained them at dinner Monday and Mr. and Mrs. Grady Wilson with a party Monday night.

Our seventh grade pupils went to Hereford last Thursday night for their graduation. They were Stella Mae Gore, Estelle Wilson, Ellen Wolfington, Leslie Vaughn and Carder Hendrix.

Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Grilland spent Wednesday night in Hereford with Mr. and Mrs. Manjeot.

There was singing at the school house Sunday night, seventy-three being present.
