ATTEND FUNERAL AT DALLAS

Mrs. S. K. Smith and Mrs. T. J. Crawford drove to Dallas Sunday to be present at the funeral of H. F. Priest, who passed away at his home there Saturday afternoon. Mr. Priest was the father of Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Crawford's grand father. He was eighty-six years old and had been in declining health for the past five months. He visited in Friona about sixteen years ago and will be remembered by our older residents.

CHARLEY HART HAS GONE

In the death of Charley Milton Hart, which occurred at the hospital in Hereford Monday evening, April 15, at six o'clock, the country loses a loyal and worthy citizen, the community a kind and obliging neighbor, his parents a faithful and dutiful son and his family a tender and loving husband and father.

He was a native of Kansas, removing with his parents to the Plains country of West Texas, where they settled near Floydada in Floyd county. Here he grew to manhood and during his youth united with the Methodist church, which membership he retained until death. Eight years ago he came with his parents and younger brother to live on the farm which they had purchased a mile and a half north of Friona where he has since lived. On December 20, 1923, he was married to Miss Grace Simpson, who with three children, Roy, four; Wanda, two, and Elda, five months, survive.

He died at the age of thirty-nine years, still in the forenoon of life, while the shadows were still pointing to the east, and his untimely death which has cast a pall of gloom and sadness over the community, came following a surgical operation which was performed to secure relief from the effects of an injury received four years ago when he sprang from a header barge to assist in quieting a fractious horse. This injury caused severe pains at intervals, becoming more frequent and painful, from which medical relief was only temporary, which caused him to seek relief through the operation.

Charley Hart lived a life which no man need disdain to call his own and which leaves no doubt or uncertainty in the minds of those who knew him best, as to his welfare in the life to which he has gone and from which none return. He was cheerful, generous, honest and honorable and was loved and esteemed by all who knew him.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the Methodist church, conducted by Rev. Beattie, of the Congregational church, and Rev. Porter of the Methodist church, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Friona cemetery. The beautiful floral offerings with which the casket was covered and the offers of help and sympathy from every home in the community were convincing evidence of the high esteem rendered him by the people of his community.

METHODIST REVIVAL

The Methodist congregation, under leadership of Pastor Rev. Carter C. Porter, have arranged for a series of revival meetings to be held in their church, beginning Sunday, April 21, at 11:00 a. m. Rev. Porter extends to the public a most cordial invitation to attend these meetings and take part in the song services and enjoy the blessings that may flow out to them.

BOVINA MAN FOUND DEAD IN BED

People of Bovina were shocked and grieved when it became known Sunday morning that E. T. England had passed away some time during the night. Mr. England was seventy-three years old and had been a resident of the Plains country, near Bovina, for twenty-two years, where he had been farming until recently when he retired from active work and moved to Bovina where he was spending his declining years.

He was born in Tennessee and came here from Oklahoma. He leaves to mourn his death three sons and two daughters, and a host of friend and neighbors.

Rev. J. W. Hatcher, of Oklahoma, and other workers will begin a revival at the "Hub" or Home-land, seven miles south of Friona at the cross roads on Monday night, April 22. Come and hear the "Whosoever Will" message. We expect to have good music and singing. W. C. W.

OLD FIDDLERS CONTEST A BIG SUCCESS

The old fiddlers' contest given at the school auditorium Friday evening by the emergency fund committee of the Chamber of Commerce was a success as to jollity, sociability and revenue.

A good sized crowd was in attendance and five fiddlers entered the contest. They were Mr. Reed, of Bovina, who won first prize; J. W. Ford, Friona, second; A. B. Short, Friona, third, and Bill Lunford, Farwell, and J. M. Sanderfer, of Friona.

Howard G. Morris, one of the R. B. R. Implement Company, acted as master of ceremonies during the first part of the program, consisting of a song by the football boys and their introduction by F. W. Reeve, a short address by the mayor, followed by a splendid talk by J. A. Blackwell, president of the Chamber of Commerce. The program was then turned over to O. F. Lange, chairman of the committee having the affair in charge, who introduced the players and announced the titles of the pieces they were to play.

During the interval while the judges, who were L. G. Simpson, J. A. Conway and F. W. Reeve, were making their decision the audience was entertained by a short contest between Mr. Short and Mr. Steele, each accompanied by a banjo and guitar, also some good clog and jig dancing. The jig dancing was done by little Miss Sanderfer and the clog was executed by J. J. (Buster) Jasper, dressed to represent a full blood plantation colored gentleman.

The decision of the judges was then announced and Mr. Lange thanked the audience for the liberal patronage and hearty applause, promising something better in the near future.

WILL THOMAS OUT AGAIN

Will Thomas, whose farm lies about nine miles south of town, was in Monday afternoon for the first time in several weeks. Mr. Thomas has just become able to be out after a severe sick spell in which he was afflicted with biliousness, rheumatism and a few other minor maladies. He says biliousness alone is as bad as being sick, without any assistance from the other infirmities.

Mr. Thomas has finished planting about thirty acres of corn and has all his land ready for planting other crops. In his opinion it is yet too early to plant cotton but expects to begin planting that about April 25. He will also plant a good acreage of grain sorghums which will make in all about 240 acres in crops. His wheat, he says, is looking and growing fine.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby had purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains, Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stamford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home, Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, explains to Pelham, that a dangerous pond near the house, in which several children have been drowned, has since been filled in, but he urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby and Junior learn that the caretaker was known to the police as "Red Charlie" and had a bad record. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household with the official title of "house detective." Over the telephone Hanby is warned by a woman not to subject his family to the dangers of the Gray house. Leslie Barron arrives making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's and interested in ornithology, but whom Hanby cannot identify, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The idea appeals to Hanby and he makes the promise. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house.

"Bill," she said, "you must be fond of the Hanby clan to do this. Poor old Bill!" she murmured softly. "Why poor?" he demanded. "I know," she said wisely. "You can't fool me." "I'm not poor," he retorted. "I'm rich. I have a family without the labor of supporting it. I'm much more sensible than you imagine. I adore your mother. She married the man she loved. Three things might have happened to me—I might have married another woman, and made her unhappy; I might have become one of those sour, cynical old devils who poison this earth; I might have drunk myself to death. I thought of doing all three at various times. I did try drinking for a year, but Dina made me feel like a d-d coward. I am now going to use some of your modern terms. I substituted my love into affection for everything that was dear to your mother. That's why I bear your superior airs with cheerfulness. That's why I talk baseball scores with Tim."

"If He's a Salesman," Hanby Reflected, "I'm Gone."

now. I guessed wrong about the big-hearted chauffeur who blew Smucker to a feed!" Hanby was worried. He had almost banished the affair from his mind. Now everything came back to him vividly, particularly the woman who threatened him with death. "Well, we're dug in here now," he observed, "and it will take something more than vague threats to turn us out."

CHAPTER VI

There was a letter for Mrs. Hanby in the package of mail. "Who's been writing to you, Dina?" her husband inquired. "The Parkers. They've been wanting to come here, but I told them we weren't asking any one till we had got used to the place. It would spoil it to have any outsiders yet. I shall be finding new wonders every minute for a month. Besides, we have no saddle horses yet, and Julia is mad about riding. That reminds me that I must order a habit and a side saddle." Hanby was still thinking of the mysterious warnings. "It's funny," he remarked presently, "that any one should take the trouble to feed Smucker for nothing. There must be something behind it." "Junior and I will find out," said Bill. "It's beneath the dignity of the lord of the manor to sleuth."

Odd Sounds Gave Rise to Belief in Demons

South America has a moaning, howling noise. Similar sounds are found in China. In England is a mountain which howls in such a way that formerly the natives listened to it with superstitious fear, while even a white man, hearing it for the first time, is startled at the mountain's "power." Another curious mountain exists in Nevada, though this one usually gives out a note resembling at first the jingling of bells and ending with a deep organ-like swell. In both cases the sounds are due to a peculiar formation of the earth, which under certain conditions of weather allows the separate particles to rub against each other and so produce uncanny effects. Elgin Island, off the Scottish coast, has its "singing sands," where at times each grain rubs against its shaw slumbers not nor sleeps. I'll tell you what I will do, Bill," he suggested briskly. "I'll beat you three sets out of four whenever you are ready. I've been reading a book on tennis tactics, and after committing it to memory I've burned it, so you can't read it. You haven't a chance!" Hanby's mood was more cheerful. "I wrote that book," he declared. "Want to bet?" "Go and get into flannels," Pelham told him. "Bill's worried," he added, to Dina, when Hanby had left the room. "I never saw him so before. Try and make him laugh at it, Bill."

Hanby's mood of depression passed very quickly. New daily interests so crowded one upon the other that there was no room for gloom or introspection. The Parkers did not come. Parker's stomach, after many unheeded warnings, had finally rebelled against its owner's habit of taking three meat meals a day. Julia Parker wrote that her husband was about to be operated upon. One day, walking down the drive, Hanby met a small, florid, neatly dressed man approaching the house—the sort of man to inspire confidence even among the most suspicious.

"On the contrary, you are expected when the bass season opens. You were kind enough to give my friend Mr. Pelham some information about this house."

"As I was in the neighborhood, I took the liberty of coming to see your improvements. I have always been much interested in the Gray house." "I shall be glad to show you over it and ask your advice. I find every day that there are a lot of things about country estates that they don't teach boys on farms—the improvements, for instance."

"You will make this," he declared. "One of the stately homes of America. You have a genius for this sort of thing." Only in one matter was his view opposed to that of the owner. He thought that the ground given over to the bird sanctuary would do admirably for ornamental glass houses.

"My wife and I wouldn't think of such a thing," Hanby asserted firmly. "We are for the conservation of bird life. You may not know it, but our rarer species of songsters are in serious danger of extermination. That bird sanctuary is a hobby of ours, and it will not be disturbed while we live."

Mr. Appleton wrung his host's hand. Hanby was surprised at the emotion written on this cheery, unlined face. "I do you credit, sir," he exclaimed. "In my ignorance I have given no thought to such matters. It was criminal negligence. I did not know."

Little Journeys in Americana

By LESTER B. COLBY

The Battle of Fayal

HAVE you ever heard the story of the battle of Fayal? One hundred and twenty white markers were planted over graves on a hilltop looking down upon that smiling harbor in the Azores, Portugal, more than a hundred years ago. Some still stand. Fayal! What heroism was done there in the name of the Stars and Stripes! What glory!

Ninety American sailors that day in the harbor of Fayal, a neutral port whose sanctity was violated by the British, licked 400 of his majesty's best fighting men. They hurled them back so fiercely, three-quarters of them killed or wounded, that the British lion, though he had 2,000 men in reserve, did not come back for more, but lay down to lick his wounds.

Capt. Samuel C. Reid was the hero of Fayal. Nor did the British, with their three ships to his one, take him. For the captain's crew was made up of hellions.

When the War of 1812 began Britain controlled the seven seas. Her shipping was rich and her ships were many. Soon the United States sent out to sea a great fleet of privateers—men—more than 200 in all. They swooped down upon the English shipping like hawks on songbirds. They struck, right and left, swiftly and with vengeance. Owners became rich and crews prospered—if they lived.

Swiftest and fiercest of all the privateers that sailed out the General Armstrong. This ship, black-hulled, white-sparred, with a rakish slant to its masts, carried an amazing spread of canvas. It soon became a scourge. Its wake was strewn with whipped hulks and its very name was terror.

Sun shone bright in Fayal and there was warmth over all. Within the protected harbor was dead calm. Suddenly out of the horizon sailed three British warships. They were the Carnation, a brig, 18 guns, the Rota, a frigate, 38 guns and the Plantagenet, 74 guns.

But this was a neutral harbor. Surely under the laws of the sea Reid was safe so long as he stayed inside. To the surprise of all who viewed the scene the British warships sailed directly into the harbor, lined up in fighting array and made ready for action. Then, after signals, a boarding party set out; 400 men in open boats. They came with music and song and cries of joy and mirth.

But they had not reckoned with Captain Reid's crew of ninety men. These were down-East fishermen, ex-privates, old man-o'-war-men, Creole privateersmen. They had learned their trade, many of them, looting Spanish ships—reckless adventurers all.

They waited until the British boats were all but bumping noses against the black sides of the General Armstrong. Then, almost hand to hand, hell broke loose. Rifles and blunderbusses roared, pistols barked, cutlasses and knives ripped and tore. The waters of the harbor about the ship turned red. The fight was short, fast, furious.

But whipped as they were, Captain Reid knew that the British would not stay away. He looked across the harbor at the three grim ships and saw sudden activity aboard. So with his own hand he fired a cannon through the bottom of the Armstrong and it sank.

Two of his ninety men were dead; seven wounded. Gathering all those able to travel about him he fled inland. In a thick-walled convent he again turned face to his enemies and defied them all, British and Portuguese alike, to take him. Nor was he taken.

Months later, Captain Reid and his motley crew arrived in Savannah, Georgia, and the nation went wild. War was over and it was a glorious homecoming. Did you know about the battle of Fayal? So passes glory. The 120 white markers, on the hilltop over Fayal, were planted the day after the fight over British dead.

LIVE STOCK

FALL FRESHENING HAS ADVANTAGES

Good Feed Supplies Are Required, Including Silage.

Where cows are kept for beef purposes and on those farms where dairying is new, or is merely a side issue, the common practice is to have the cows freshen in the spring. Under these conditions the cows produce most of their milk during the pasturing season and are nearly dry by the beginning of winter and entirely dry by midwinter. Under this condition most of the milk is produced from pasture which is, as a rule, the cheapest feed if the labor of growing winter feed is taken into account. Spring calving usually goes with a small average milk production. It is justified under some conditions, for example when summer feed is very cheap, but proper winter rations expensive.

After a community has passed through the early stages of development in dairying, a change to fall calving usually begins. To do this requires good feed supplies, including a succulent feed, either silage or roots for winter feeding. More attention is also necessary to having comfortable barns and good provision for supplying abundant water during the cold months.

When these conditions are reached the advantage of fall calving begins to be realized. The cows are expected to milk at least ten months in the year. It is found that when proper winter conditions are maintained, cows calving in the fall will produce more milk than when calving in the spring. The average test is also a little higher.

Furthermore, the farmer, if engaged in general farming as well, has more time to give to the cows and to raising the calves. Still another advantage is that the dry period comes during the hot part of late summer when the weather is unfavorable for milk production. Still another advantage is that fall calving brings the highest milk production during the months when the price is best.

Exercise Is Essential for Profitable Porkers

An abundance of exercise for the pregnant sows is absolutely indispensable if thrifty pigs are to be expected. To force the sows to take plenty of exercise, it is a good plan to feed them at a point quite a long way from their sleeping quarters. If there is at this place a rack with choice legume hay, the sows will make many trips back and forth each day. When sows are fed ear corn and the allowance is properly limited, they will spend considerable time searching for the last kernels, and the longer they can be kept on their feet, the better it is for their health. If a ground concentrate mixture is fed, it is often a good plan to scatter a little shelled corn, whole oats, or sheaf oats on the ground for them to work over. Sows heavy in pig should not be compelled to plow through snowdrifts, but paths should be made for them. Ashes or litter, such as straw, should be put on icy places, else they may slip and wrench themselves, which may result in abortion.—Bulletin 400, Wisconsin Experiment Station.

Never Locate Pastures Along Running Water

The hog lots and pastures should never be located along a stream and if possible they should be removed somewhat from highways. It is not always possible, especially where pasturing is being done, to protect the hogs from sources of infection along the road, but it is possible to fence the animals away from streams. Free range is desirable in extensive hog production where the farmer is raising his own feeders, but the possibilities of obtaining hog cholera infection should be guarded against carefully in a case of this kind.

Sheep Get Chaff Into Wool Around Hay Stack

Sheep should not be permitted to eat around hay or straw stacks, or to eat in any other manner that will permit seed and chaff to get into the wool. It is very difficult for the woolen manufacturer to comb this seed and chaff out of the wool during the manufacturing process, and sometimes burry and seedy wool has to be "carbonized"; that is, treated with certain acids which dissolve the chaff and other vegetable matters that have lodged in the wool, without destroying the wool fibers, which are animal matter.

Brood Sow Feed

There are a number of mixed feeds which have been fed in connection with corn to brood sows which have given very good results. The extent to which they should be used depends quite largely on relative prices and how much bother it is to a farmer to do his own mixing. Most of the commercial feeds should be fed at the rate of about three-fourths of a pound per sow daily in connection with enough corn to keep the sows in good flesh but not fat.

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks, Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless, Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

Man's weakness lies in his faulted wisdom.

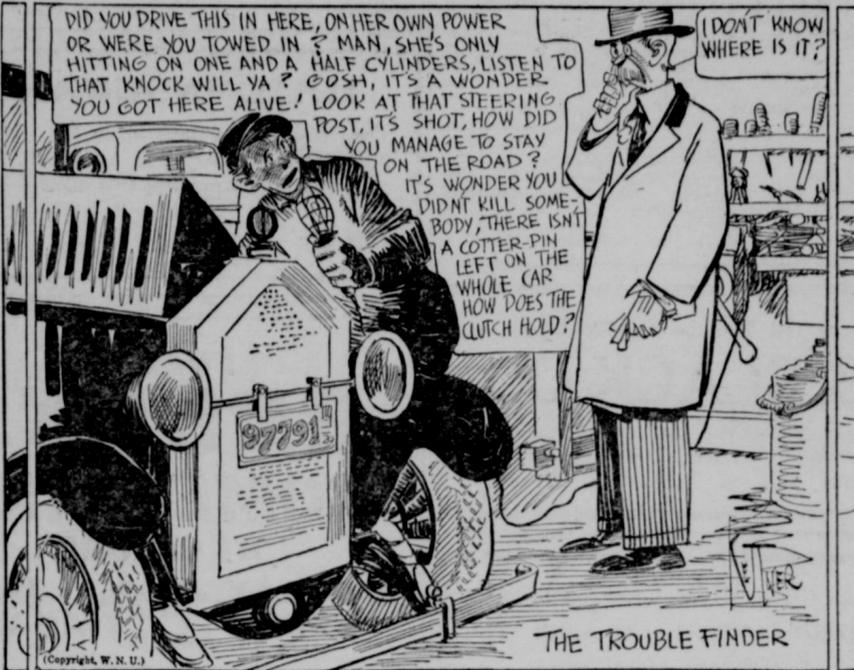

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physical and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings. The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant. This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

A PEA'S POINT

"Of course," said the first Pea in the pod, "we do not look like beans. Neither do we resemble the potatoes. And I doubt very much if anyone would come up to us and say: 'Well, how about having a few radishes today.'"

At that, all the other peas laughed. Have you ever seen a pea laugh? They fall around and sometimes roll off a table in laughing so hard. The peas had all been shelled now.

"Well," "Then," asked the rest of the peas, "why are you making such a fuss—saying all you're saying?"

"Because," continued the first pea, "we may not be beans. We may not be potatoes. We must never be taken for these vegetables."

"But—and here comes my point—a pea's point—it is a very fine one, so don't miss it!"

All the peas jostled nearer and listened.

"You see," the first pea went on to say, "we are peas and nothing else, but we're not so much like each other as to have people say when speaking of two things just alike: 'They're as like as two peas.'"

"I object to that. Just look at the little pea lying over there."

"That little pea is very small, and I am very big—for a pea."

"We're not just exactly alike. So I don't think people should use that expression 'as like as two peas.'"

"True, true," said the other peas. "We are of different sizes, and there are different families of us."

"We, to be sure, are called the Telephone peas. A fine modern name."

"But we are not all alike. There are thin ones and fat ones in our family."

"We're quite, quite different."

"Well," suggested the first pea, "let us start a brigade, and call ourselves 'The Different Peas.'"

"Then, we'll whisper as we're being eaten: 'Peas are not alike. They are quite different. There are thin ones, fat ones, delicious ones, and dried up ones.'"

"We'll just see if that won't make a difference."

"A fine scheme," said the other peas. "When our sizes are so different we should not be thought so alike."

"Truly, first pea, you have made a good point and we are all in favor of it."

So the peas kept quiet for the rest of the time until they were ready to be cooked, but once in awhile one of them did roll a little bit, saying as it rolled:

"You made a good point, first pea."

"Peas Are Not Alike."

If you were to ride upon a donkey, what fruit would you resemble? A pear (pair).

Why is a business man like a divinity student? Because he studies the prophets.

White Elephants

"Father," said a small boy, "I was just reading in my picture book an interesting story about the scared white elephant of Siam."

"The 'what' white elephant?"

"Scared."

"You mean 'sacred,' don't you?"

"Is that what it is? I thought it was scared because it looks so pale in the picture."

Rid of Constipation. Improved Both Health and Looks

"I suffered from stomach and bowel trouble for a number of years. I finally got so bad that I had no life or energy left, and felt that there was no help for me. I was completely worn out all the time, had a distressed, haggard look on my face. My mind was dull, my eyes blurred, and I was unable to take an interest in anything."

"I commenced using Milks Emulsion in May. It occurred to me that the best way to let you see the wonderful improvement Milks Emulsion had made in my health and appearance, would be to send you the picture that I happened to have taken a few weeks before I started using your Milks Emulsion, and to have another picture taken now, and send both to you."

"I am still taking your Milks Emulsion and improving each day. I know I would have been in my grave had it not been for your Emulsion. I love to take it. It is so pleasant and agreeable."

"I only weighed 108 pounds when I began to use Milks Emulsion, and now I weigh 138 pounds. It has cleared up my complexion, made my eyes bright and a difference in my looks, as you will see by the two pictures. I don't look like the same woman. To my mind it is Nature's beautifier."

"I try to get everyone that I meet to take Milks Emulsion as it is the most wonderful medicine in the world."

Thursday, April 4, was begun by singing "My Old Kentucky Home." Bobbie Conway gave a reading, "The Three Sisters." Miss Pittman's room entertained with a program at this time and Neil Childs told a Bre'er Rabbit story. The story "Sleeping Beauty" was made very effective by being dramatized. Arthur Baker gave Romans 1 in the form of a reading.

A Trip to Amarillo.

A number of high school girls, accompanied by Miss Askew and Miss Holmes, motored to Amarillo Saturday, April 15, in one of the school trucks driven by Mr. Reeve. The group left Friona at 8:30 Saturday morning. Everything went well until we were outside the city limits of Hereford when a grocery boy passed us and yelled, "You gotta flat!" We told him not to get funny and kept going at the rate of about 30 miles per hour. Soon we decided that the kid knew his onions. We stopped by a store to fix the flat. After working for a few minutes on the tube Mr. Reeve decided that we would have to go back to town to get the tire fixed. While it was being fixed we made snap shots and enjoyed ourselves by eating candy and chewing gum.

By 10:30 we were in Canyon and in Amarillo by 12:00. Miss Askew went to a telephone to call a bakery, laundry, candy factory and flour mill to see if we could visit them in the afternoon. I am safe in saying that it took her an hour to call all the places. While she was gone the girls combed off and went walking. Most of us followed Helen and Virginia who took us to an elevator in the Western Union building. We had a nice little ride up about ten stories. Pearl Drake yelled when we went up until the operator started to put her out to walk down.

The first place we visited was the creamery. A guide took us thru the different departments and explained everything to us. They had just finished churning and were molding and wrapping butter when we went in. Four girls were wrapping it and putting the pounds into boxes. They could wrap it faster than we could watch them. Everything was very sanitary in the building, even if we did see a man stirring butter with a shovel. After Wana stepped about knee deep in the butter mold the guide took us to the ice cream department. After we had seen the different processes which the cream goes through, the guide gave us lots of Eskimo pies and Dixie cups. We more than appreciated them!

The next place we visited was a laundry. The atmosphere was very different from the ice cream factory. We froze in one place and smothered in the other. A guide explained everything to us and the laundry such as the drying, ironing, cleaning, etc. We especially noticed the organized work of the employees.

After some delay we went to the flour mill. Everyone said they enjoyed this visit more than any other. A guide took us through the mill and showed us the different grades of flour and bran. We had lots of fun riding the elevator which is used to carry sacks of flour down to the box cars. By this time we were all tired and hungry. On the way back to town Miss Askew took a collection of dimes to buy hamburgers for supper. We ordered two each.

When we got back to town Miss Askew gave us 30 minutes to go shopping. We met at the same corner and started for home about 6:30. On the way home we amused ourselves by telling stories and singing songs. When we got to Hereford Virginia and Helen had an appointment with the Rexall Drug Store. We waited about 30 minutes for them to fulfill their appointment. After that we started for home. We reached Friona at 10:00 o'clock.

I am prepared to file saws of all kinds. I also do grinding and general sharpening, such as shears, scissors, lawn mowers, hoes, butcher knives and all ordinary garden or digging tools. T. F. LAWRENCE, at the Friona Planing Mill.

A POOR MARRIED MAN

In a three act school play to be presented at the school auditorium Friday night, April 26, the following will have parts: Frank Truitt, John L. Furlong, Fields Gore, Arthur Baker, Wanda Walker, Pearl Martin, Gladys Elam, Helen Crawford.

"A Poor Married Man" has for its scene a small college town in the Middle West.

A professor has married a charming young lady whose mother insists on accompanying the pair to their new home. His friends mistake the mother for the bride and relate to the professor escapades of the mother's husbands and her daughter. He things they are referring to his wife. A college boy and pretty reporter add to his suspicion. He becomes convinced his wife means to poison him. The bride who married him at her mother's instigation, learns she loves him and when mother learns Billy is wealthy she determines to divorce the professor. She is successful. The professor remarries, selecting a girl who will not encumber him with a mother-in-law, but her innocent father is trapped into marriage with the woman who caused him former trouble, and she once more becomes his mother in law. However, one thing leads to another—and you must see the play to get the rest.

HOOVER'S HOME ECONOMY 89 YEARS, 89 MILLION KAHN LOSES TITTA RUFFO FAHN IS DEAD

President Hoover, believing that economy should begin at home, will put the Presidential yacht, Mayflower out of commission. The President will do his yachting in a rowboat when fishing. The country will save $300,000 a year, and 148 sailors that have wasted their time on the Mayflower will be assigned to new naval vessels.

The Mayflower has been added to the cost of maintaining a president ever since the days of Theodore Roosevelt and President Hoover's determination to discontinue a thoroughly undemocratic arrangement will be generally appreciated.

The people would not grudge a good President any comfort or luxury. But a $300,000 yacht tacked on to a $75,000 salary seems fantastic.

George F. Baker, dean of American bankers, ruler of the gigantic First National of New York, which is one of his minor possessions, has celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday.

Everybody wishes him many more years to get and give.

Since the people do not yet know enough to develop their own resources and supply what they need, it is fortunate that they have such men as Baker, Rockefeller and others to show them how.

Marshal Foch is dead. Farewell to a great warrior, a true man. He has gone and taken his wages—a name that will live in history and the eternal gratitude of his countrymen.

Frederick the Great's last words are supposed to be tete d'armee, "head of the army." He often spoke French in preference to German.

Pitt, whose genius kept Napoleon out of England, said as he died, "My country, how I leave thee." He was worried about the future.

What a man does while he lives is more important than what he says when he dies.

Paul Revere Rides Again

THE ALARM

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON
So through the night rode Paul Revere,
And so through the night went his cry of alarm.
To every Middlesex village and farm,
A cry of defiance and not of fear,
A voice in the darkness, a knock at the door,
And a word that shall echo forever
more!
For, borne on the night wind of the Past,
Through all our history, to the last,
In the hour of darkness and peril and need,
The people will waken and listen to hear
The hurrying hoof-beats of that steed,
And the midnight message of Paul Revere.

ALTHOUGH Longfellow was writing in a figurative sense when he predicted that "The people will waken and listen to hear . . . the midnight message of Paul Revere," it is literally true that every year Paul Revere rides again. For April 19 is Patriot's Day, and in two states, Maine and Massachusetts it is observed as a holiday. In Boston crowds gather in North Square and Elliott Square to see two riders, impersonating Paul Revere and William Dawes, start on their ride through the Middlesex towns to Concord and the citizens of those towns greet them with patriotic exercises.

Although Paul Revere seems destined to go down into history as a "midnight rider" and as such will always be remembered by Americans, the fact is that he had many other accomplishments which probably would have made him famous even had he not made his spectacular journey on horseback. But how many Americans knew what these accomplishments were, or, for that matter, know much more about him than the ideas gleaned from Longfellow's poem? In the first place his name was not really Revere at all. He was the son of a Frenchman named Apollis Rivore who Anglicized it to Paul Revere when he came to America to learn the goldsmith's trade. The elder Revere married Deborah Hitchborn, a Boston girl in 1704. On January 1, 1735, Deborah celebrated the New Year by presenting Apollis with a son. Perhaps neither father nor mother realized that this one of their twelve children was destined to become such a famous man.

Young Paul learned his father's trade and eventually became one of the best designers and mechanics in gold and silversmithing. Today some of the most highly-prized possessions of New England families are old silver cups, spoons, mugs, tankards, pitchers and other various articles bearing beautiful patterns which were designed and made by Paul Revere. Not content with his eminence in this profession, Paul turned his hand to other activities. Some one has said "he was the original 'do it now' man, for he never permitted himself to get into a rut. He tackled many tasks and finished them all." For instance, in 1776 he turned to soldiering and as second lieutenant took part in the expedition against the French at Crown Point.

His trade as a gold and silversmith led him to experiment in copperplate engravings and without the benefit of instruction he soon became the foremost engraver in America. In fact, Revere may properly be termed the father of American cartooning, for his first production as an engraver was an allegorical representation of the Stamp Act dispute. His pictures were mostly political caricatures and historical scenes connected with the struggle for independence. In addition to being a cartoonist, he was also something of a poet and he usually explained his caricatures with good-humored, sarcastic verse. He was a portrait artist of considerable ability, two of his subjects being John Hancock and Samuel Adams.

As a side line for all these activities he also practiced dentistry. The following advertisement appeared in the Boston Gazette and Country Journal, prior to the Revolution.

Whereas, many persons are so unfortunate as to lose their Fore-Teeth by accident and other ways, to their great Detriment, not only in Looks, but speaking both in Public and Private.—this is to inform all such, that they may have them re-placed with artificial ones, that looks as well as the Natural & answers the End of Speaking to all Intents by PAUL REVERE, Goldsmith, near the head of Doctor Clarke's Wharf, Boston.

Two years later this same paper carried the following advertisement by Paul Revere, dentist:

ARTIFICIAL TEETH
PAUL REVERE

Takes this method of returning his most Sincere Thanks to the Gentlemen and Ladies who have employed him in the care of their teeth, he would now inform them and all others who are unfortunate to lose their Teeth by accident and otherwise, that he still continues the Business of a Dentist and flatters himself that from the Experience he has these Two Years (in which time he has set some Hundreds of Teeth) that he can fit them as well as any Surgeon-Dentist, who ever came from London. He fixes them in such a Manner that they are not only an Ornament, but of real Use in Speaking and Eating; He cleanses the Teeth and will wait on any Gentleman or Lady at their Lodgings, he may be spoke with at his shop opposite Dr. Clarke's at the North End, where the Gold and Silversmith's business is carried on in all its Branches.

One bit of Revere's dental work is historic. When the body of Gen. Joseph Warren was removed from the temporary grave on Bunker Hill, the identification of the body was made certain by Revere who recognized the wire he had use in setting an artificial tooth for the general.

Ever think of Paul Revere as a publisher and seller of song books? Well, he was! In the Boston Gazette for February 4, 1765, appeared this advertisement:

Just published and to be sold by Josiah Flagg and Paul Revere in Fish

Street, at the North End of Boston—A Collection of Psalm Tunes in two three and four parts from the most Celebrated Authors, fitted to all Capital measures and approved by the best Masters in Boston, New England. To which are added some Hymns and Anthems, the greater Part of them never before printed in America. Set in score by Josiah Flagg, engraved by Paul Revere.

Although Longfellow made his ride to Concord famous, the fact is that he had previously taken others which were more remarkable and fully as important as that one, even though they were not so spectacular. He was selected by the Committee of Correspondence to carry the news of the Boston Tea Party to New York and Philadelphia and, leaving Boston on December 17, he reached Philadelphia the day after Christmas. His next ride was to carry a message in regard to the Boston Port Bill, which became a law on March 1, 1774. On this occasion he broke all horseback records to Philadelphia, reaching there in less than six days. But one of his most important took place on December 13, 1774, when he carried word to Portsmouth, N. H., that a large garrison of British soldiers for Fort William and Mary was on its way there. Acting upon Revere's warning the New Hampshire patriots went to the fort, forced the surrender of the small garrison consisting of a British captain and five soldiers and carried away a hundred barrels of gunpowder which were hidden under the pulpit of the Durham meeting house. Most of this powder was put to good use at the battle of Bunker Hill.

During the Revolution when the British evacuated Boston they tried to put the cannon at Fort Independence out of commission by breaking the trunnions. It was Paul Revere who made them serviceable by inventing a new kind of carriage. It was also Paul Revere who was sent to a Philadelphia powder mill to get plans for a similar one to be operated in New England. The proprietor refused to allow him to make drawings of any kind, but Revere looked over the mill, returned home and from memory built a powder mill that was a great success. After the war Revere resumed his trade as a goldsmith and also built a factory for casting church bells and bronze cannon. When copper bolts and spikes began to be used instead of iron for building ships he conducted a series of experiments which led to the building in 1801 of a large plant at Canton, Mass., for rolling copper. He was the first man in this country to smelt copper ore and to refine and roll copper into bolts and sheets. Some of his copper bolts went into the making of the famous frigate "Old Ironsides" and the plates on the Massachusetts State House dome are made of copper supplied by Paul Revere. Several of the bells which he made are still in existence and one of them to this day calls people to worship in All Soul's Unitarian church in Boston. This same bell is famous as the "Abolition Bell" because it was tolled for John Brown on the day he was executed.

Paul Revere, merchant, is another role he played. A copy of the Independent Chronicle and Universal Advertiser dated January 1, 1784, carries an advertisement stating that he could supply the public with "An importation of metal goods, door locks, snuff, playing cards, Irish linen, German serges, etc., at his mart directly opposite the Liberty Pole, South Boston."

Watch Your Feet
Asked whether people abuse their stomachs or their feet the most, Dr. William S. Sadler of the American Magazine replies unhesitatingly, "Their feet." He explains that people have had a little sense knocked into their heads about overeating and wrong eating, but precious little regarding their feet and their care.

AT THE EIGHTEENTH HOUSE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

THE house was the seventeenth one, and she felt a faint stirring of the hope which had seemed for the last two hours to be dying within her breast. Seven was a lucky number. The seventeenth house could not fail to produce encouragement of some sort.

It was a pretty little house like a dozen pretty little houses on that street where at the door of each she had met abrupt refusal. All the houses were small and pretty except one, the big white house in the corner. The big white house was the next one, the eighteenth.

Lillie Moffat approached the seventeenth house with more confidence than she had felt before. She mounted the steps and touched the bell. The name on the door was Derry—D. J. Derry, David—Daniel? She wondered what the D. stood for while she listened for footsteps. But no footsteps came. Yet she was sure there was somebody in the house for she could hear voices. She rang again and with real disappointment decided that nobody was coming to the door. Turning she moved away. As she went down the steps a voice spoke from a window above her.

"What do you want?"

Lillie looked up. A black-eyed, chubby-featured woman, wearing a boudoir cap, leaned over the sill. The black eyes seemed to pierce the near-leather side of the bag Lillie carried. "Oh, you're an agent!" said the woman. "I guess it's just as well I didn't come down then. I don't want any of the stuff you're selling." Suddenly she leaned a little farther. "Why don't you go to work doing something respectable?" she demanded. "I don't think much of people that run around with a bag trying to swindle folks out of their money, just because they are too lazy to work. They're worse than tramps." She drew back from the window and Lillie heard her humming, off the key, a strain of "O Sole Mio."

The color that had been whipped into Lillie's face by the cruel words vanished and left her as white as a faded little woman of forty-six may become when she is under stress of terrible circumstances. Tears came to her eyes and her lips quivered. She fairly had to feel her way down the street.

"After that," she thought, "I might as well go home."

And yet how could she go home with all the hope of her venture out of her and look into John Henry's questioning eyes? She had never had a secret from John Henry in all the twenty-seven years they had been married and she could not begin now when he was laid up with three broken ribs and a broken collar-bone. It had been bad enough to have such an accident befall him, but it would be almost worse to fall in a project when they so needed a little extra money. And the firm had told her that Fluff's Faultless Flavors sold like wildfire; people were simply crying aloud for them; agents were making $10 a day! Ten dollars a day! She had been a bit dazzled, perhaps, and John Henry had said: "It will get you out in the air. It isn't good for you to stay cooped up in here all the time with me." The truth was John Henry couldn't help groaning a bit at the pain of knitting bones, and every groan distressed her. If she were out of the house for a little while each day he could groan as much as he pleased.

"No, I won't go home," said Lillie to herself. "I'll take the next street and pretend that I'm just starting in; somebody is sure to buy of me. And I won't let what Mrs. Derry said hurt me, because—She couldn't have known what it is to have a broken husband who has never been able to save much because his mother lived to be eighty-nine and had to be doctored every minute—"

She blinked away the tears. Then she saw that she was close to the big white house on the corner, the formidable aristocratic house which seemed to look down on all the smaller ones. The eighteenth house! No use in going there. Those heavy lace curtains at the windows forbade you, the great front door was a barrier which only the elect might pass. And the name, Mrs. Lawrence! She had heard of Mrs. Lawrence; she had even seen her, coldly remote through the plate glass windows of a limousine. No, she couldn't go there, and yet, she had promised herself to take every house as she came to it, to be frightened away by none.

"It can't be much worse than what I've gone through," she told herself. She mounted the steps and rang the bell. A moment's wait and then the door opened. An elderly maid intervened.

"Haven't you come to the wrong door?" asked the maid, reading Lillie's errand expertly.

"I—I don't know," Lillie murmured in dismay. She drew back a step. "I—I beg your pardon."

The door closed automatically, but it opened again the next instant.

But her hair was like snow. This white hair was a beautiful face, high-bred, serious, with no color save in the very red lips and bright blue eyes.

"Come to the fire," Mrs. Lawrence said. "Take this chair," and she all but helped Lillie into the downy depths of such a receptacle for a tired body as only great wealth can provide. She took the opposite chair and began to talk naturally, pleasantly, drawing Lillie out to talk in return.

In a few minutes Mrs. Lawrence knew all about John Henry's broken bones and how he got them.

"He must be a very brave man to paint a church steeple," she said. "I can scarcely get my feet off the ground that I don't feel dizzy."

There was a movement and sound and Lillie, turning, saw the elderly maid pushing a tea-wagon toward them. Upon the wagon was a tea service, finger lengths of hot-buttered toast, and some crisp little cakes.

"It is just my afternoon tea time," explained Mrs. Lawrence. "I hope you feel like joining me in a cup of Oolong."

Over their teacups the talk grew somewhat more lively, for Lillie was being cheered inexpressibly. When at last she dared stay no longer she arose and tried to express her enjoyment of the entertainment.

"The pleasure has been mine," replied Mrs. Lawrence. "I am so much alone and so lonely since—since my husband died." She paused perceptibly. "I have enjoyed your company very much. You have done me good."

"If I have done you good, oh, think how much good you've done me!" breathed Lillie.

Nothing was said about Fluff's Faultless Flavors. Indeed, Lillie had for the time forgotten all about them. But when she got home she remembered and she told John Henry. But just as she had known he would, John Henry understood.

"You got more out of that experience than if you had sold the whole outfit," he said.

Lillie was to get more yet out of the experience, for that evening came a messenger with flowers and fruit for the invalid. And every day thereafter the offering was repeated. More than this, Mrs. Lawrence drove to the door in her limousine and in the sight of the neighborhood made a friendly little call.

And to be added to this is one thing more: Lillie sold out her entire stock of flavors that very week. Everybody bought of her! Mrs. Lawrence had done that for her, too!

Spain Puts Forward Claim to Columbus

Apparently not content with having financed the discovery of America and having thoroughly established herself in our southern hemisphere, Spain now seeks to prove that Columbus was a native Spaniard.

Recent researches at Seville and Berlin have so excited the Spanish, whose only claim on America now is cultural; that a Madrid newspaper has offered a prize of 50,000 pesetas for the best proof that Columbus came from the land of Isabella and Ferdinand.

Historians have hitherto accepted the word of Columbus when he went before Queen Isabella and said: "I come from Genoa, where I was born." The acceptance of this single statement may have led to what Professor Altamira has called "the fossilization of historical error," for no objection has been raised to it except the feeble observations of such scholars as Humboldt that Columbus was more typically Spanish than Italian in his zeal.

Spanish scholars justify the alleged prevarication of Columbus upon three grounds. In the first place, they believe that Columbus followed the proverb, "No man is a prophet in his own country." It is also asserted that Columbus really came from Galicia, which had taken sides with John against Isabella and was consequently in disfavor at court. Thirdly, Columbus was partly Jewish on his mother's side, and, since Queen Isabella was notoriously anti-Semitic, he feared her displeasure.

As a matter of fact, Andreas Colon (Columbus) appears in the annals of the Inquisition as a Jew in 1489. The evidence connecting Columbus with the Jews may be found in letters written to his friends and to his son, Ferdinand.

It is also pointed out by scholars that in 1402 and for fully a hundred years thereafter Columbus was not claimed by Genoa, where he was known only as a wine merchant, but that after the magnitude of his discoveries became known the city hailed him as her own. Indeed, these scholars deny Columbus his own name, for the only time the discoverer of America called himself Christopher Columbus, they say, was in his letters to Ferdinand and Isabella, and all his other letters are signed "Cristobal Colon." This is a common Spanish name, and one may yet read in an old house in Porto Santo, Galicia, the words ". . . Colon, ano 1490."—Living Age.

German City Forests

The municipal forest of Bitterfeld, Germany, the city in which are situated the largest lignite mines in the world, must soon be felled, for it stands above rich veins of the valuable fuel, which is here obtained by surface mining. But a German city without an adjoining forest is unthinkable, hence it has been decided to reforest large areas in which the coal has been exhausted. German pines and firs grow so rapidly that a fair-sized wood will arise in 25 years.

A BAD JOB

A farmer and his wife went to London on a visit, and while doing the sights they went to an art gallery. Among some reproductions of classic art they came to one more striking than the rest and inquired what it was.

Elephants Made Trouble

The herd instinct among elephants is so strong that if once was responsible for the destruction of the greater part of a station on the Burma railways, says a writer in the Atlantic Monthly. "Some years ago a German firm of dealers in animals purchased from us a baby elephant, and delivery of the animal was accordingly taken at a camp near a railway station in upper Burma. He was put into a car and the car shunted into the siding for the night. The calf, unused to such treatment, started to trumpet him little heart out. This was disastrous, for it quickly fetched in all the elephants in the vicinity, who began by wrecking the car, which was soon smashed into matchwood, and, having freed the calf, started on the station. Fortunately we were able to leave the German firm fight out the intricate question of damages with the railway authorities."

Wilbur Good Back at Atlanta

HERE we have the chief of the Crackers, Wilbur Good, back with an old love after a couple of years down at Macon. Wilbur returns this year as manager, attempting to push the Crackers over after years of wandering in the wilderness, writes Ben Cothran in the Atlanta Constitution. He has wandered all over the baseball map, and for ten years has a batting average of .341.

Uncle Wilbur was born unto Mr. and Mrs. Good in Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, on September 28, 1885. He grew up playing baseball and in 1904 became a professional, playing with Johnstown—where they had the flood—in the old Tri-State league. Uncle was a lefthanded pitcher then, and good enough to get a trial with Pittsburgh, coming back the next season and being bought by the Yankees, who sent him to Montreal in 1906. He wanted at Montreal a raise if he made good, his release if he didn't. He made good, got no raise and asked for his release, which was given him, and he went back to Lancaster in the Tri-State, still pitching. In 1907 he was with Steubenville, Ohio, of the old POM league, which was then organized baseball. The Braves bought Good and sent him to Akron in 1908, and it was here that he changed over from pitching to playing the outfield.

Good played so well that Cleveland drafted him and he stayed with the Indians, who finished second in the race while Wilbur was there. In 1910 he was traded to the Athletics, who sold him to Baltimore, where he was drafted by the Braves and then traded to the Cubs. Here Uncle Wilbur remained until 1915. He played the season of 1916 with the Phillies and then was sold to Kansas City. In the early part of the season of 1917 Good broke his collar bone while diving for a ball and played but little that season. He had a big year with the bat in 1918 and was drafted by the White Sox, who kept him during 1919 and sent him back to Kansas City.

Remaining with the club Good was made manager in 1923 and then ran into trouble during the middle of the next season, having an argument with the club owner. He was released outright and made connections with Atlanta.

He was here in 1925, when the Crackers won the pennant, and piled up an average of .385 at the plate. From Atlanta Uncle Wilbur went to Macon and managed the club there last year, finishing well up in the race.

Tourists Avoiding Driving At Night

More than 70 per cent of all motor tourists avoid night driving whenever possible, according to an analysis made by the touring bureau of the Chicago Motor club of statistics gathered by the national touring board of the American Automobile association.

"Our analysis discloses that the fears of those motorists are fourfold," declared Charles M. Hayes, president of the club. "First, many main highways are narrow, 16 or 18-foot concrete strips. The clearance between passing cars is insufficient from a safety standpoint in daylight; it is, in the case of some drivers, dangerously close at night; secondly, there is the headlight menace; thirdly, poor visibility of highway signs, and finally, the prevalence of intoxicated drivers on the highway at night.

"The narrow roads are, to some extent, being eliminated. In some metropolitan areas the counties have widened them to 40 feet, but this great movement is yet in its infancy. A vast amount of work is to be done.

"All of these hazards can be successfully eliminated if the right steps are taken. Headlights can be standardized and adjusted in such a way as to eliminate glare. Frequent inspection and enforcement is the cure, once a uniform safety standard has been agreed upon.

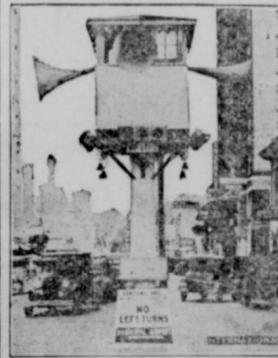

"The inadequacy of signs, of which so many motorists visiting our touring bureau complain, is not due so much to the character of the signs as the positions in which they are placed. Oftentimes they are well out of the easy range of the headlights of a car, and the car owner must come to a full stop and 'comb' the landscape for them with his spotlight, if he has one.

"The answer to the drunken driver menace is prosecution to the limit. Were all of these conditions surrounding night driving removed, or remedied to a large degree, far more motorists would drive at night, with a resulting decrease in the congestion on highways during daylight hours."

Trees Are Spared Along Roads in Massachusetts

In Massachusetts the department of public works is empowered by law to make roadside improvements, the work including such planting, replacements and care as may be necessary. When a road is laid out as a state highway it is generally made sufficiently wide to provide an area on each side of the traveled portion for roadside improvement. No tree, shrub, or plant within such a highway can be cut, removed or new ones added without a permit from the highway department. The state has a nursery at Palmer, where trees and shrubs are propagated and where the highway landscape supervisor trains men in the care of trees and roadside beautification.

Success With Four-Wheel Jack

The four-wheel jack is now being used in England with much success, and much blessing from motorists. The four jacks are placed under the axle next to all four wheels, and by means of a pumping handle on the running board of the car, the entire machine is lifted from the ground. The jack handle is easier to use than a bicycle pump.

Community Building

Church Bulks Large as Community Asset

Few persons, however limited their interest in organized religion, would care to live in a community without a church. Purely aside from actual membership numbers or the number and money worth of plants, the churches are a community asset of incalculable value. The point frequently is overlooked. Too often the influence of the churches is underrated.

It may be felt that because only a certain percentage of the people are church members and because not all of these attend or take any actual part in the work of the institution, its importance is to be discounted. It is a mistaken, shortsighted view. For the church is as indispensable to community life as is the school (which only limited numbers attend), and its position hardly is comparable, because of the difference in purposes, with that of business enterprises.

There are and will remain differences in faith, doctrine and practice; the ideal church for one individual or group is not and could not be, in the nature of things human, the ideal for all. There has been a growth of church co-operation locally and elsewhere. The prospect of wider church union is at times bright, again disappointing. But without the churches are here and will remain, each one or each division seeking in the best light it can command to minister to the spiritual needs of the people. If on no other basis than that of good citizenship, the individual is under obligation to give the churches sympathetic consideration and support.—Kansas City Star.

New York Town Gets Revenue From Forest

Little Falls, N. Y., a city of 14,000 population, is demonstrating what can be done with a municipal forest. Other cities might profit by following the example of the New York municipality.

As far back as 1896 Little Falls was purchasing lands with the view of ultimately controlling the watershed of the neighboring Spruce and Beaver creeks. Today the water supply of the city is protected by municipal ownership of 4,003 acres of land at the headwaters of the two creeks, writes R. R. Fenska, of the New York State College of Forestry.

Up to 1927, 1,200 acres of mature timber was in a very nearly virgin forest of spruce, balsam, fir, hemlock, yellow birch, maple and beech. In 1925, under the direction of a forester, 5,000,000 board feet of timber, including both softwoods and hardwoods, was marked for cutting. This timber was so selected that its removal will not in any way impair the value of the area as a protection forest. The timber has been sold to a concern specializing in high-grade lumber for piano sounding boards. The revenue from the sale will reimburse the city for the purchase of the land and timber.

Highway Improvement

To bring the native flowers, shrubs and trees from the fields and forests of Missouri and plant them in attractive order along main highways of the state is the aim of a highway beautification movement launched at Higginsville, Mo.

The first work will be done along Transcontinental highway No. 40, which crosses Missouri from St. Louis to Kansas City. The entire plan grows from the initiative of the Missouri state highway commission in offering aid in roadside improvement. Assistance in beautifying farm homes and surroundings along the roads also has been offered by the Missouri agricultural extension department.—New York World.

Loan Associations Grow

Total assets of building and loan associations in this country now approximate $7,179,000,000, an increase of $884,450,000 over 1927, according to the United States League of Local Building and Loan associations.

Pennsylvania is the leading state in total association assets with a figure of $1,240,000,000. Ohio is second with $1,035,000,000, New Jersey third with $886,000,000, and Massachusetts fourth with $478,000,000.

The assets of building and loan associations in Illinois total $338,000,000, and New York $350,000,000. In Indiana they are $274,000,000; in California, $242,000,000; in Wisconsin, $218,000,000, and in Maryland, $210,000,000.

At Least, Deserve Courtesy

When a committee of your fellow business men call on you, regardless of their errand, for heaven's sake treat them courteously; they're not trying to make any commission on the money they seek to obtain from you—in fact, they're working for your interests as well as their own.—Mobile Register.

Building Loan Alchemy

The saving instinct and the homing urge meet in the offices of the building and loan association, and in the alchemy of a new credit, turn out at one door a holder of real estate bond and at another the pleased possessor of a home.

JINGLE BELLS

I sat by the roadside and told myself that I was probably one of the seven worst "fussers" in the United States and the Dominion of Canada. I had played my game like a fifteen jeweled loob. The first rule for making a girl ear out of your hand is never to let her know when you get mad. The second is not to be sorry if you do. I had a blow out in both suits.

While I sat there it began to drizzle, but I thought too little of myself to care to move, so I didn't. Instead I recollected with delightful pain how eminently desirable Maryella was.

ing, she was obviously the hand-work of a beauty-loving god who wanted to show what he could do. But she had eyes, dark ones, that came from no heavenly work shop. In them there was a bit of temper, or daring, and an invitation to come along that was irresistible.

If a man must lose his head over a woman, Maryella's type offers the utmost justification. If you have any curiosity and a wee bit of nerve, you made up your mind that you would have to find out whether to believe her eye, or the rest of her face.

Up to that afternoon I had been doing pretty well, too. Not having money in bales, I had started against Cooper with a considerable handicap. He worked short hours in his father's office which would eventually be his; while I plugged away for a salary—a good one, but nothing that would make the mint work overtime to keep up with me.

There is no use concealing what my job is. A good many people know already from having seen my name signed at the bottom of a column of alleged humor which I conduct daily for a syndicate of newspapers. Any one who has read my stuff knows that I work hard for my money, especially when I write verse.

Besides my syndicate work I do all the big stories for the Daily Mail, which is the principal morning paper of our city. It is pleasant because I do not have to be in the office constantly like a regular reporter. When they need me they send for me. When there is a big political convention or a disaster or a sensational murder I usually cover it.

I had been offered a job as war correspondent but I declined. Just because Irvin S. Cobb got back with all his arms and legs attached is no sign that they wouldn't be able to hit the next fat man that went over.

When I was thoroughly wet through so that it didn't make any difference what I did, I decided that I might as well start for home. It would be more comfortable to die of pneumonia in my own bed. So I got up and sloshed over to the car to get my coat, which I had laid aside when the contest between me and Grandmother began.

Just by way of a passing expression of my feeling, I gave the crank a turn.

"Bang!"
The engine started.
I stood in the rain a full minute longer, reliving my mind before I mounted to my seat and steered Grandmother Pace back over the sloppy roads to the city.

What was the use now?

CHAPTER II

Our version of "Pygmalion and Galatea" would doubtless surprise you if you are at all familiar with the original, in which Pygmalion is the artist and carves the lady in the sketch out of a block of marble.

We started out to rehearse it that way, but ran into difficulties when the matter of costumes came up for discussion. It seemed advisable that the statue should wear white tights and white grease paint on the face in order to carry out the illusion. All the ladies of the club were quite content that it should be so, but when it came to assigning the parts each and every one refused to be Galatea.

For a time it looked as if we would have to fall back on some little sketch of Shakespeare's myth. Maryella made the practical suggestion that we change the story. Her idea was to make Galatea a sculptor who hammered a hunk of stone into a beautiful male statue by the name of Pygmalion.

Can you imagine an anti-feminist thinking up a thought like that? Maryella's suggestion carried. As the literary man of the organization, I was appointed to doctor up the manuscript to fit the change of characters. Later, much to my surprise and in spite of my protests, the stellar role of Pygmalion was forced upon me.

Tonight was to be the dress rehearsal and on the following evening we were scheduled to give a trial performance in the barn at the Old Soldiers' Home. The trial performance was for the double purpose of getting easy in our parts and of making the old soldiers realize that war is not so terrible after all.

When I returned to my bachelor rooms in town I had only time to change to some dry clothing and hurry over to the rehearsal without getting anything to eat. Food did not appeal to me anyway. Neither did anything else, least of all rehearsing a lot of fool love talk. My own romance had suffered such a disheartening set-back that I was in no mood to enact the role of a hand-hammered Romeo of mythology.

But I went just the same. You know how hard it is to step out of the routine business of your life just because some disaster has befallen you. Your perceptions become numbed and you wonder vaguely why the sun is shining, but you go on doing the things that are expected of you just as you have always done.

"Business as usual" is not the motto of an exceptional nation. It is the underlying principle of the progress of the human race.

The Sheridan Dramatic Club had borrowed for rehearsals the stage of the local opera-house, which was vacant that week. It was there that I weeded my disconsolate way.

I was late but it didn't make much difference, as all during the first act the statue of Pygmalion was a papier-mache figure. Between the acts I was supposed to take the place of the statue in the same pose so that a little later I could come to life in response to Galatea's wish.

When I came in they were rehearsing with the dummy. Everything appeared to be going well; Maryella looked absolutely ravishing in the Greek drapery, and Jim Cooper was doing the best he could to impersonate a skinny Greek warrior.

He was even thinner than I had suspected. As a Highlander he would never be a conspicuous success. Any one could tell at a glance.

apprentice was taken by Mrs. Henningway, a dazzling blonde, who was worth going miles to behold, in a short Greek tunic and sandals. She wouldn't have fooled any one but a blind man into thinking she was a boy, but nobody minded that. She had talents enough to get into a Ziegfeld chorus any day.

There were a dozen other parts played with intent to kill in the good old amateur way. I discovered former male friends hidden behind bushy beards that dropped off occasionally at a critical moment, leaving the actor bald-faced and speechless; and ladies I used to know disguised as Helenic maidens by doing their hair into a Psyche knot and trimming their best nighties with a Greek key-design and an occasional Swastika.

Off stage, doing a piece of embroidery while she waited for her cue, was Mrs. George P. Lillilove, the wife of the most popular undertaker in town. In Greek roles Mrs. Lillilove looked almost exactly like a haystack with a tarpaulin over it.

I slipped into my dressing room unobserved. My costume was there. I had not seen it before, so I was a trifle surprised at the bulk of it

The whole thing could have been put in the pocket of a dress waistcoat without spoiling the shape of it any. It was silk and white, but it seemed awfully thin. I played safe by wearing my underwear beneath it.
