With the employment of R. S. Glenn, local man, as architect for the new West Ward school building, the trustees of the Cisco independent school district Tuesday afternoon took another step in the direction of that much needed building to accommodate the scholars of Cisco. The trustees have accepted plans submitted by local architect, James Davies, Fort Worth, and submitted to the board at some length, discussed Davies plans as well as submitted by others, after which the retirement of Davies, the board then considered the employment of an architect to draw plans and supervise the construction of the building. Glenn was the only name placed in nomination and he was elected on the ballot. The new building, when completed, will cost approximately $100,000.

GOOD COTTON CROP IS SEEN BY GIN MAN

Sam Yeager, prominent gin man and citizen of Putnam, was a visitor to Cisco Wednesday, and stated that he was getting his gin in readiness for a big run this fall. "Being a gin man I am naturally an observer of the condition of the cotton crop, which seems to me to be the best I have seen in many years in the Putnam country. The plant is looking fine, growing like a rag weed and taking on all the fruit the plants will mature. My observations show few boll weevils, at present, and I do not think any damage is being done by these pests. However, there are a few leaf worms, according to some reports. Ordinarily there would be little to fear from the leaf worm, but this year the crop is late, the plant is small and should the leaf worm appear in any considerable force, they might be a material factor in reducing the yield. Farmers have welcomed the leaf worm in past years when the crop was rank, and vegetation thick, as they destroyed the foliage and allowed the sunshine to open the matured bolls nearer the ground. But this year the crop is not so far advanced, and the plants being comparatively small, these conditions do not extend to the leaf worm could seriously damage the crop by an early appearance."

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 15.—Superior Judge Douglas Edmonds today refused the offer of Attorney S. S. Hand to put up a $50,000 cash bail for the release of Leo P. Kelley, charged with the murder of Mrs. Myrtle Mellus. Don Bullock is spending this week in West Texas on business.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

EXCELLENT PEACHES GROWN ON LEVI MCCOLLUM FARM. Members of the tribe of Levi have been famous for many good deeds, according to ancient Bible lore, but it seems that those who bear that name are still doing those things that work for the blessings of mankind. This was evidenced when Levi McCollum exhibited at the office of the Daily News and Weekly American and Roundup one day this week, some of the finest specimens of peaches that have been grown in either ancient or modern times. These peaches are the J. H. Hale variety, and are claimed to be superior to the famed Elbertas, both in size, flavor and productivity, and not so susceptible to decay.

MIAMI, Aug. 15.—Judging from the fines collected by the city secretary through the city court, imposed for misdemeanors, few infractions of the law were made in Cisco during the first 15 days of the month, as he reports the collection of only $149.70, inclusive of those imposed this morning when six were convicted on gaming charges.

THE WEATHER. West Texas: Tonight and Thursday partly cloudy with showers in the Panhandle.

CIVIC PREPAREDNESS

It would be a mighty good business stroke for the people of Cisco for permanent work purposes—a reasonable estimate of the irregular plot of ground north and east of the Mobley hotel, and facing the Union depot.

This property is actually the gateway to the city and, under lease, has been beautified and maintained at considerable expense to the taxpayers. Many sincere people, with no desire to find fault with anybody, would ever and always consider it nothing short of a disgrace should the railroad commercialize this park site by disposing of it for the erection of business houses of any description.

"Write to me in my cream satin that I may figure something scandalous will come walking down the road at just the dramatic moment.
I will be courteous, like this," Betsy said in a deep, obedient tone, "and when our eyes meet, he shall see something of something that. And then he'll ask my name for my hand, and I'll go to him."
"Dear Betsy," Mary breathed, her eyes shining as her cousin enacted the scene with dramatic intensity.
"Napoleon will make him his, or something," Betsy said, and Monsieur La Vert, crushed, will come to me my commands, and then we'll have I shall queen it over him "No, father, I hate him!" Betsy stamped her foot viciously, much to Mary's consternation.

"Thank God! So did I," Paterson breathed, relieved. "But Betsy, see that that's settled, hadn't you better go and see the girls? They will be here at any moment."

"Yes, papa," Betsy nodded obediently. "I'm going right away." She stooped and swiftly gathered up the scraps of paper at her feet.
"Here, let Eph see that," the father looked at the scraps and the sudden orderliness that had taken possession of his daughter.
"That's all right, papa," Betsy clutched the scraps in her hand.
"I'll throw them away. Will you come and help me, Mary?" Betsy said in a few minutes. "I'll only be a few minutes. I just have to put on my dress."

"Yes, I know your few minutes when it's a matter of clothes, young lady," her father nodded. "You run along, and don't stand chattering at me like you two," he called after the departing figures of his daughter and his niece.

CHAPTER IX
The great double doors with the huge brass knocker were thrown wide. The little breeze fanned the candles and made the flame waver ever so slightly, as though they were leaping in glee at the prospect of the evening. Now carriages were driving up to the door, and liveried servants hurried back and forth along the pathway assisting the guests to alight. The shining silver punch bowl was filled and drew the early arrivals like flies about a drop of honey. From the balcony came the booming voice of Major Patterson, interrupted by the correctly delicate tones of Miss Mascobird bidding their guests welcome.

Ephraim and his shadow, Pippen, concluded their business of lighting the lamps on the veranda and looked through the windows at the gayly dressed throng.
"Pippen," Ephraim whispered to his companion, "who dis big gun dey all gettin' ready fo', dis Jerome Bonaparte?"

"Who, sirrah, hes the brother of the one of Paris? his name 'Papoleon,'" Pippen looked scornfully at Eph.
"I know all de quality folk in Ma'land and Virginny. I reckon dat some pore white trash No'thern place," Eph shook his head, puzzled.

"Look! Dah Miss Mary!" Ettie interrupted, pushing her way to the window. "Ain't she light an' airy?
Oh, dar her head, dar Massa Preston. Mas'm, didn't she get a fine, big man? I tell you! Oh, looka dar! Er dar ain't Massa Robert E.
Lee!"

"Dat who am, who 'nuff!" Eph exclaimed, his eyes shining with excitement, his white teeth gleaming. "Um, um! Look! Oh, niggah, look! Dar she is! Dar she is!"

A sudden silence. Then a hurried patter of feet and a click of heels to the stairway. There, poised lightly at the bend of the stairs, her hand on the railing, stood Betsy Patterson. The glorious red hair was piled high in a profusion of ringlets, the tiny encasing curls, arranged with studied carelessness, falling about her face. Two rows of pale, gleaming pearls were twined about her head, lost now here, now there, in bronze beauty. From the shell-like ears long pendants of pearls swung back and forth.

"Who, my dear, I didn't what," Major laughed.

PARIS, Aug. 15.—Joseph's coat-of many colors had nothing on the gay ones that are appearing for this summer's wear.
Plain coats cut on straight lines in sober neutral tones have gone the way of many good things and the Paris dressmakers are now having chic women wear coats in many shades and fantastic patterns.

There are bright printed and embroided coats to wear with frocks with uneven hem lines, puffs and ruffles. They are particularly becoming for separate summer wraps and instead of extinguishing the gay frock, enhance its daintiness and femininity. A printed coat with a printed gown makes a delightful ensemble.

Transient porous weaves arranged in the levelness of floor and geometric patterns in harmonizing shades. Chalks is popular printed in quaint patterns that flourish in our grandmother's days. A smart one recently seen at the Chateau de Madrid at tea time, had a small stiff old fashioned ruff pattern on a pearl gray ground. The colors were royal blue, red and green, so that the coat could be worn with many gowns.

Suzanne Talbot is showing a multicolored coat of bright colored flowers on a black background. Another comes of dark blue geometric crepe embroidered all over with embroidery of irregular pebble dots in white silk. It is laced about the edges with plain dark blue crepe which gives a decorative effect.

Primitive Folk of New Mexico Human Enough to Break Dishes, Instructor at Randolph Finds

The housekeeper of the primitive American Indians of New Mexico had one trait that the housewife of today has—that of breaking dishes. W. F. Bruce, Randolph College instructor who is among a group of scholars studying the early Indians in that state, tells of some of the interesting things he found in their dwelling places, as follows:

Cisco Daily News, Cisco, Texas.

Dear editor and readers: We have had rain and cloudy weather for two or three days but this morning is bright and sunny. Some of the girls, who are hardly distinguishable from the men at a distance so far as garb is concerned, seem to be dicker with the ranchman who has brought in the milk for some saddle horses for the day. The folks here are not so violent as might be implied in the little typographical error of my other letter.

Or if it is the primitive folk that might be in some one's mind, the revelations from our digging so far would show them to have been human in their activities.
Broken fragments of pottery indicate that they sometimes broke their dishes. One room that was completely covered, as all of them are, has been entirely cleared out and shows walls of unburned stone plastered with adobe as is also the floor. In the southwest corner is a bin whose walls are of stone. This may have been for corn. It's northern wall was a wing for the deflector which stood a foot and a half from the west wall and consisted of another low wall of stone before a circular opening which is thought to have been for the admission of air. The deflector presented a direct draft especially on the fireplace. The fireplace was a depression in the floor a foot east of the deflector.
In it were ashes and charred wood and broken pieces of a large bowl.

Three or four skeletons have been brought to light, seemingly buried in the refuse heap in a north and south position. The

TEXAS BUDGET TO GO UP $3,500,000

Appropriation of $2,500,000 for Prison System and $1,500,000 for Judiciary Salary Increase Needed

AUSTIN, Aug. 15.—The appropriation bill for the next biennium will call for at least $3,500,000 more than the appropriations of 1928 years ago, said R. B. Whitall, chairman of the board of control, now making the budget.

In support of his statement, Whitall pointed out that since the last budget was made by the board the law was changed so as to require the state prison system to have an appropriation of $2,500,000 for 1929. In addition, the law became effective in raising the salaries of all the judges of Texas, which Whitall said means an additional $1,500,000 for the two years.

Among the items coming first, then the A. & M. college, Texas Technological college and the College of Industrial Arts, the group of eight state teachers' colleges and the junior colleges at Stephenville and Arlington. All except the last two have asked for practically the same amount as paid at the University of Texas, claiming the work is similar, but the graded system in the order named is to be retained.

The salary of the president of the university now $10,000 is requested at $12,000, and the A. & M. president may be given the same amount, whatever is agreed on, besides that of his wife and variable costs with large state investments under his control, such as buildings, land, machinery and requirements.

It is the hope of the board to find enough money to erect some new buildings at both educational and elementary institutions and some are sure to be recommended, but at places yet to be fixed. Many new buildings were requested.
