CITY BAND

The Pecos City band s making P. V. S. railways from Carlsbad, the November term of the District ership of Mrs. Ada Cochran, of Fort and up to November 2nd: totals 24, and best of all, the or-Grand jury: C. W. Tudor, F. ganization is meeting encouragement, moral and financial, from the citizens of the town. Its the Pecos way of doing things.

The band, we are frank to say, is being organized along different lines as heretofore, and in a way that will be spell success, regardless.

Mrs. Cochran is competent as a leader, which fact is attested by her many successes, also by the recommendations which she produces. The fine band organized by her lone effort at Fort Stockton is sufficient recommendation to our minds. Each memeber is purchasing his or her own instrument, and in looking over the names you will notice that all are home people, that are sure to stay on, as said before, regardless

A band should have the support of a town, its an indication of the town's progress to be able to sport win, R. B. Edgell, R. L. Baker, H. a real live band, all its own, at the many functions during the year. Take the County Fair. When visitors, after inspecting the unlimited resources, represented by the products at the fair, began to sing the praises of your county, you felt a little bit proud. Oh, yes, you did. It was a great feather in our hat so to speak. But when it came to the band. "No, we didn't raise that, we had to import it." Instead of adding another feather to the al ready big bunch, those you had began to wilt. Let's have a homegrown band, furnishing home-grown music at the next fair. Can do it, easily. Mrs. Cochran is very enthusiastic, in her work, stating that she never had brighter prospects, anywhere, than she sees in Pecos for a good band. The old members are on hand rendering what assistance they can to those beginning. Several of our young ladies have enrolled, and are going to do their best to outdo the boys in blowing for the home town.

Every town indirectly supports a brigade of knockers with their little hammers, why not get behind and boost those with the horns?

The following is the membership: Misses Eva Butler, Lillie Pearl Buccholz, and Bernice Richburg; Messrs. R. E. Miller, Will and Charlie Miller, Henry and Dewey Richburg, Paul Frame, Troy and Vernon Hicks, Van Camp, Burette Hefner, Floyd Copeland, Bransford Haislip, R. R. Smothers, M. A. Churchill, Jno. Supreme Court Upholds Constitutionality of the Law.

News has been received of the decision of the State Supreme Court in the injunction suit against Ward County Irrigation District No. 1. That decision sustains the constitutionality of the law on all points at which it was attacked. An application for rehearing has been filed by the plaintiffs.

The text of the decision has not been received, but as explained to the News, the substance of it is here given: The court holds that the contention of applicants for injunction, in that they have been deprived of property rights without due process of law, by having the value of their lands impaired on account of putting non-water right Frank Garrett an auto dealer of land on a level with that carrying as such water rights may be acquired by the district by purchase, gift, or condemnation under the power of eminent domain. THE BOLL WEEVIL

The boll weevil is marching thru Georgia. He has already covered Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, and portions of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee. In a few more years he will have marched across the state of South Carolina, and have the main part of the cotton belt.

All this means that cotton will in all probability bring high prices in the future. This year prices are good in spite of the big war in Europe, and seed is bringing perhaps the highest price in the history of its manufacture.

Cotton seed is bringing $40 per ton, and over much of the cotton belt is worth 12 cents. This makes a bale of cotton and its seed worth

This high, dry country will never be trougled by the weevils. They will not live here. In all respects as well, we seem to have a splendid cotton country. Yields of from a half bale to a bale per acre are common and two bales are not infrequent.

Cotton perehaps needs only about one-third as much water as alfalfa, and where a bale to the acre is made it will be more profitable than any but the best yields of alfalfa when hay prices are good. To produce Ernst Dooley to S V Tarand market a bale of cotton on an acre, will cost approximately as follows: Preparation of the land $2, S M Prewit et ux to W H seed and planting $1, water, say $1.50, applying the water $1, two hoeings $2, four cultivations $2, the picking, $10, ginning $5, making a total of $24.50. If the cotton and seed bring $75, it leaves a net prefit of $50 an acre.

Even a half a bale to the acre, figured on the same basis will pay a net profit of bout $20 an acre, and that is enough to mae the land producing it worth $300 an acre. A half bale is less than the average in! this country.

Mr. H. T. Collier, of Hoban, frequently surpassed this yield on field of over 100 acres. Mr. Sisk last vear averaged three fourths of a bale to the acre. Mr. Couch has -eldom had yields less than this.

Mr. Yeates, of Barstow, is just harvesting a crop of about 1 3-4 bales to the acre on 35 acres of cotton. This crop must be paying him something like $100 net profit per acre after paying all labor and other expenses. Mr. Yeates broke a 12year old alfalfa sod for this cotton and broke it so well that all the alfalfa was killed. He worked it well and watered it only twice after it came up.

This record crop emphasizes the great fertilizing value of alfalfa.

The alfalfa plant manages to draw great quantities of the richest fertilizing matter from the air and combines it and stores it in a form that other crops can use it; T C Byers et ux to Orville when the alfalfa or its roots rot in the soil. A good season's growth of alfalfa perhap adds perhaps $25 worth of fertilizer to an acre of

As more cotton is grown in this section ginning prices will go down, better prices will be given for cotton and seed. There is no reason why the irrigated lands in this district may not grow enough cotton soon to justify an oil mill and a compress.

HOW TO PREVENT CROUP.

It may be a surprise to you to learn that in many cases croup can be prevented. Mrs. H. M. Johns, Elida, Ohio, relates her experience as follows: "My little boy is subject to croup. During the past winter I kpet a bottle of Shamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house, and whn he began to have that croupy cough, I would give him one or two doses of it and it would break the attack. I like it better for the chhildren then env other

CHAPTER I.

The Cryptic Coin. Kitty Gray, crack reporter on the Evening Star, pulled out of her typewriter the last sheet of paper and piled It on the little heap of finished copy which lay at her right. Then she closed her desk, stepped to the wardrobe and took her coat and hat. Taking her little collection of copy paper from the desk, with the privilege of long tenure in office she walked to the desk of the city editor, who, although himself a married man, had all this time without success tried to look at the work before him and not at the trim figure of Kitty Gray making ready for her luncheon journey.

"When will you deign to return?" asked he with a certain lapse in journalistic dignity.

"When I have a better story than this guff-in the vernacular." Kitty's favorite lunching place was In one of the great department stores, where women were made welcome and comfortable, and she bent thither her steps: but midway in her journey she paused, as often she did, to gaze into the window of the little antique shop which occupied space in one of the unimportant side streets.

Kitty Gray's eyes were arrested by something that she saw—an object which she did not recall ever before to have noted in the window. It lay close to the glass, just tilted back so that it might be the better seen. It apparently was an old coin or part of one, curiously done in some dark emetal, probably silver badly oxidized.

As Kitty bent down to examine it more closely, she saw that the coin bore an inscription, or what appeared to be such—an inscription broken across by the fracture which had diwided the coin itself.

Her curiosity excited, Kitty Gray stepped into the little shop, whose proprietor she knew very well.

"Good morning, Mr. Mainz," she said with the customary newspaper inversion of the order of the day, "how's business? Any new fans, idols, coins-?"

"Coins? Vot? Sure, I got somet'ing spew dot is olt. I choost t'ink of him. He iss only a part of himselluf. Should

A show him to you?" "Oh, maybe I saw it in the window," said Kitty, simling. "You mean the broken coin?" "Sure. Vait till I got him."

She took up the coin now from the case, and some strange sort of thrill came over her as she did so, she could not tell why. What was its message, halting, broken, incomplete? Did it hold a story? What was the story?

"It's odd, isn't it?" said she, and laid it down again carelessly—with a carelessness well feigned, for Kitty Gray had bought antiques before now, and knew well enough when to suppress interest.

"Odt? I should say it vas odt," re-Joined the old dealer. Kitty had picked up an inlaid mother of pearl fan and was studiously examining that now. "How much?" asked she, holding up

The fan. "For the broken coin?"

"No, the fan."

"I want twelf tollar for him." "For the coin?"

"No, for the fan. For the coin-vat you gif me?"

"Why, what earthly use would that, Mr. Mainz?'

and I make you a present of the broken coin anyway." Kitty Gray's heart gave a sudden little jump. She would have given twice eleven dollars for the coin itself, but she made a good pretense. "Eleven dollars is a good deal of money," said she. "I would have to go without lunch for quite a while." "You are a goot sport, Miss Cray," said the old dealer. "I dank you very mooch. I should wrap them up?" "The fan-yes. Let me see the coin again." She pushed across the counter almost the last of the tightly folded bills in her purse.

knock off two tollars from the fan!" said Mainz. "Vot is it? It is not Cherman, it is not Franzoesisch, it is not English. I am all those. But I could not read him." Kitty held before her the curious object, a slight frown puckering her brows.

"Well, you see," said she, "it broken right across on the right hand side—almost a third of the writing is gone. It says something about looking for something under the floor, under the pavement of some place of torture or torment." "Und vot next?"

"Thesaur'-that word's broken across, but it must mean 'thesaurus' -that means 'a collection'-a 'collection of value,' don't you know? plain. 'Rex'-'regis'-it means 'king's' toward the corner where customarily or 'of the king.' "The king's treasures" she took her car for home.

'I'm down to the last words now. It is curious—a proper name. It is only the Latin name of the kingdom of Gretzhoffen! That's a little bankrupt kingdom over in southern Europe, near the Mediterranean. I know about it-I did a story about it once, the time the kingdom was trying to float a loan in this country. I had to read up a whole lot."

"I bet you could did it, Miss Cray," said Mainz, admiringly. "Vell, gootby. Come again und tell me vot you find out, like a goot girl."

"Sure," said Kitty, and turned to leave, her coin clutched tightly in her hand. So intent was she on her purchase that she did not notice she had dropped the package containing the shell-ribbed fan. Vaguely missing something as she emerged into the open air, she turned back, and almost ran into a man who had passed her as she came out. He was a foreignlooking individual, dark of hair and eyes and skin, strongly built, a figure such as one would note. He bowed now courteously enough as he handed her the package she had let fall. Kitty thanked him and hurried on her way. This stranger entered the shop and spoke in some foreign tongue to the old dealer, who shook his head.

"No," said he, answering in English. "I choost sold it-to dot young lady who vent out. "Who is she? I know her very well. She is on der papers. Better look out or she put you in der paper sure. Miss Kitty Gray vos an oldt frent of mine. She read like a book vot vos on the coin. Vy didn't you telephone-maybe she sell it back to you-I don't know. She wouldn't sold it back to me, I know dot. Vot! you are going?"

CHAPTER II.

The Big Assignment.

Kitty Gray did not go to her usual place for luncheon that day. Instead she hurried into a nearby delicatessen shop and bought a sandwich, which she put in her handbag. After this she hurried on back to the office. Arrived there, without ceremony she went again to the deak of the city editor, and silently laid down before him her empty purse, her antique fan, her sandwich and her broken coin.

Cutler looked up with professional

"Yes, Miss Gray? Why all this orderly array of fresh and interesting objects?" "That is my story," said she. "What makes you think so? Are you seeing things, Miss Gray?"

"Look here." Kitty picked up the coin and showed it to him. "See, it is broken quite across-more than a third of it gone. The inscription is Latin. It is not so much what is on the coin—it is what is off of it. Perhaps it commemorates something."

"Commemorates what, Miss Gray?" "Precisely—what? That's the story!" "By Jove!" Cutler was studying at the inscription. "'Sub' means 'under' -what does it say?-under the bamboo tree?"

"No, 'under the sidewalk' or the

'flagstone,' or 'floor.' " "'Underneath the flagstone' or 'pavement' or 'floor'—'in the angle' or 'corner'-whatever that may be-'chamber of torture'-'room of torments'-whatever it is-'there will be found treasures'-'of the king'-'of

"Gif me for the fan eleven dollar, There is a story for you-if we can only dig it out. There'd be an assignment, wouldn't there? I'd rather do that than society in the summer-

Billy Cutler, time-tried news man, grown thin and grim and gray in the business, sat for just one moment in thought. "Wait a minute, please," said he at length, and rose to leave the room. Kitty did wait anxiously enough, for what reason she could not tell. She sat at her own desk, the mysterious broken coin tight clutched in her hand. It seemed an hour before she saw the slender form of the city edi-"Read the inscription for me, and 1 | tor returning from the door which led to the office of the manager and publisher of the Evening Star. He looked at her thoughtfully as he approached.

Gray's eyes grew larger. "Expense money. Three months vacation. Full powers as missionary plenipotentiary of the Evening Star to Gretzhoffen, ambassadress to any old place you happen to think of, Miss Gray. I never knew the old man to go off his head before, but he has this time."

Tugging at her heart the swift feeling that she was leaving her usual modest and safe line of life to adventure upon something perhaps fateful-perhaps indeed fatal-Kitty Gray. "The next line is one word; it's all sober-faced, turned from the door of there-'Regis,'" she went on. "That's the Evening Star and walked slowly

The pictures all hung on the walls, yet several were askew, and—the little wall-safe back of one of the pictures-which had held some small objects of little value, an old daguerreotype or two, some silver spoons, a few gold pieces which she had cherished-had been broken open. Its contents now lay upon the floor. Amazed, Kitty stooped and picked them up, one by one. Nothing vas missing-even the gold coins were there. Nothing had been harmed, I'ui who had done this, and why?"

CHAPTER II.

En Voyage. The great liner Anne of Austria ic in her slip at the dock, her gian: pulses just throbbing now and then. Everywhere men and women were hurrying to and fro in the customary orderly confusion of the last few moments before the departure of an ocean steamer.

Calmly Kitty Gray passed on her way to the boat's office and asked for her mail and her keys.

As she turned, she almost stumbled against a man who had just hurried aboard-a dark man, thickset, foreign in appearance. She had the strange conviction that she had seen him be-

Then she turned to settle herself down in her quarters. So far as she knew, she had not an acquaintance on the boat.

Now, oddly enough, she recalled the face of the stranger, the dark-visaged foreigner whom she had met at the ship's office. Surely it must have been the same man who had handed her her package when she dropped it in the little antique shop! Why should he be on board this boat? Why should he recognize her, remember her-for he had! Trust a woman to know that -he had-he did. Yes, he had known her. Again a cold feeling of apprehension clutched at Kitty Gray's stout little heart.

She rose and tried to fling off her depression by means of a visit to the dining saloon. But for some reason she felt she would be more comfortable—or safe—in her own room. Here she lay down upon the single berth, which was directly beneath the porthole.

She woke—she knew not when nor why-woke with her eyes staring, passing in her instant from sleep to

A face was looking in upon her! A man had been looking at her, or trying to look at her, as she lay asleep.

Kitty Gray's instinct spoke to her some message—she could not tell what. Swiftly she caught the chamois bag from her bosom, and, emptying its main treasures into her hand, placed them in that other treasure house of woman-her stocking. Again feeling the drowsiness invoked by the fresh salt air, at length she lay down once more upon the little couch and resigned herself more comfortably to slumber.

But again she woke—this time it was with a scream of terror. She had felt the touch of a hand. Something had tugged at her neck.

She raised her hand. The chamols bag was gone—it was the jerk of the broken silk cord that had hand that had done it, a strong, dark or wasted. hand, full-veined, hairy. It still clutched the bag-it still was visible at the porthole. A ribbon end had entangled itself for just an instant in the porthole fastening—an instant long enough for Kitty to see what had been the hand that had committed this robbery.

But who was the robber himself? Quick as thought Kitty sprang to the door, ran down the deck, out the next deck door. The band was giving its first saloon concert, and the decks were sparsely tenanted, it seemed. Far off towards the bow a man was passing—what man she could not say. He seemed neither to hurry nor to linger. She could not make out who it was, dared not hang upon him her own suschamois bag was worthless-it had held only a kerchief, a bit of powder puff, perhaps a little silver-nothing more. Her real treasures-she knew where they were now.

The captain was outraged at what he learned when at length she gained admittance to his cabin. With marine precision, he acted at once. From that time on all through the voyage, a boat detective stood at each end of the passageway which led to Kitty's state-

The Consul's Story.

The business of any true American consul is to have known the father, or at least some relation, of any caller who comes from his own nation. Consul Jethro Thompson of Ohio, cast away in the melancholy enterprise of representing the dignity of this republic in this small and none-too-wellknown principality of Gretzhoffen, was glad-really glad-to see Miss Kitty Gray. And he knew-really knewher father, or had done so at the time when he was still living.

"It's a grand little place, isn't it-Gretzhoffen?" safd Kitty smiling. "I've read about it—and written about it before now. But this isn't a vacation, really. I am on a big assignment, Mr. Consul. I may want your help—the only trouble is, I don't know what I do want to do—I am after a story, and I don't know where it is or what it is!"

The gaunt, kindly old man smiled at her. "Well, my dear, rest assured that I will do all I can for you. And, between us, we ought to start something, maybe; if it's stories you're after, you've come to the place where they grow, that's sure enough. Why, Miss Kitty, the story of the king of Gretzhoffen alone would fill a book."

"What do you know of Gretzhoffen, anyhow?" he asked suddenly. "You said you had written about it. I suppose-"

"Well, you see," replied Kitty, "when the big news story about the proposed Gretzhoffen loan-its hawking about the street and its rejection when that came out I was put on the assignment of looking into Gretzhoffen in general. I remember that the old king's name was Michael, wasn't it?" "The one that died? Yes, Michael the First. He was a good sort. His death was the unluckiest thing that ever happened for this poor little people. He was a good man, King Michael, and a strong one and a just. So much cannot be said, I am thinking, of the new incumbent of the throne. Michael the Second.

"You see, this Michael the Second is only a king in name, when it comes to facts. He is only a little lieutenant. He has been put on the job by a bigger and stronger man-Count Frederick is the real power behind the throne in Gretzhoffen-a strong and handsome man-be sure you don't fall in love with him. What Count Frederick plans no one knows. Perhaps he has his own eye on the throne-we can't tell what may happen. I say it is a tense sort of place. Gretzhoffen. But Gretzhoffen is broke. Michael, the king, is broke. Count Frederick, the Warwick of Gretzhoffen, also is broke. That is why they tried to make a loan in our own country.

"But they didn't seem to have the collateral-no unused revenues-nothawakened her! And there was the ing which had not been used or spent

> "When Michael the First died, his treasury disappeared. He was rich, the old king was-rich in the name of Gretzhoffen. But the crown jewels, the imperial securities, the crown treasures of all sorts, the imperial mintage of every description—they disappeared. There was rumor that the old king hid his treasures somewhere, but that he left some sort of a mysterious record by which they might be traced. No one knows just what was left for that record. It is known, however, or supposed, at least, that it was put into the possession of an old servant-one of the few men the old king trusted. But this man finally gave up some part of what he knewpart of the proof, whatever it was-to the new king, when he himself was was their oyster, and they opened and scraped the shell.

"Now, in case the Count Frederick the big plunger, or his man Grahame, or the little King Michael the Second, should ever get hold of the remaining clue to the whereabouts of old King Michael's treasury-pouf! -you know what would happen then. There would, Miss Kitty, to quote a certain American ballad, 'be a hot time in the old town' in that case."

"It's a story!" said Kitty Gray, drawing a long breath. But a troubled light came to her eyes at the same time. "How will a fellow dig it out?" she asked whimsically.

CHAPTER V.

The Encounter.

Meanwhile, during the interview Kitty Gray had with the American consul, a scene of other import was enacting elsewhere in the Gretzhoffen capital. In the interior of a white marble fronted palace, perhaps a mile or so distant from the humble quarters of the American consulate, a tall, dark, imperious man was pacing up and down restlessly, his eyes now and again turned upon the door of the great apartment, as though he expected someone to enter. At length the door did open. A soft-footed servant appeared.

"Monsieur Roleau, excellency." he announced.

"What, Roleau!" exclaimed the tall man impetuously, as the visitor entered. "What has kept you? The ship docked hours ago. And have you got it? Come, come, man!" The individual addressed as Roleau bowed deeply. "Excellency," he said, "I came as soon as I could be sure I would not be watched."

He was a man of dark complexion, of strong and sturdy build, of broad shoulders and deep chest—a man half a giant, one would have said—but his eyes dropped as they met the stern gaze of him he addressed, as though he might have been his master.

"You found it-you succeeded, then -tell me!"

"Excellency—sire—yes."

The newcomer extended a hand which trembled slightly. "I swear it was in this bag"-he was offering a little chamois bag tied with a ribbon at the top-a bag which apparently had been once suspended by the broken silk cord attached to it.

"You say it was in this bag-then why not now?" The tall man caught the little receptacle from the other's handsripped it wide-shook out the contents. There fell into his hand upon the table near which he stood, only a few trinkets of a woman's toilet-a little dainty handkerchief-a coin, yes,

The tall man held this up in his hand, his face distorted with rage.

"What! a half-dollar of their cursed money! Curse you!" He half shrieked, and as he did so flung the piece full in the other's face, with such violence that the skin broke under its im-

"The coin!" went on the enraged speaker—"what do you mean? Do you mock me, Frederick, your real monarch? You shall die for this. You have failed-you have not found ityou have lost it!"

His own eyes half starting from his head in his anger, he strode forward and caught the throat of Roleau in his two mighty hands, shaking him as he would have shaken a child.

"Go!" he said, and flung him toward the door.

It was as Kitty Gray, after leaving the American consulate, was speeding to ly, bowed, raised his hat-yes, ev ward her hotel in her hired vehicle that she caught sight of a man staggering from the side entrance of a great mansion house of white marble front. He seemed to have escaped from some calamity-from an attempted robbery or murder. Without pausing to ponder upon propriety, she halted her vehicle and sprang out, hastening over to the sufferer, who stood the two faces are strangely alike. W at the edge of the curb.

"What is wrong?" said she. "You are in trouble—you are hurt! Shall I take you home—to some hospital to the hotel? Come in, you are welcome."

The man looked at her mutely, hesitating.

"Come, I will carry you where you went she smiled grimly to herself. The kingdom, or at least Michael did. It and unsightly as he seemed, hurried him into the door of her own veh and followed him.

"The Ritz, driver," she directed. A so, in the role of Samaritan, Kitt Gray made her second arrival the day at the stately hotel which she he selected as her own abode.

All through the ride the man at h side remained silent, suffering acut ly. He turned his face away. Agai there came to Kitty Gray the strang feeling that she felt something which she ought to recognize, she could no tell what. In truth, sympathy had th better of curiosity for the time. Sh did not examine her strange compa ion closely, only speaking to him occasional word of sympathy and a surance. Suddenly remembering the she did not know who he was, and n membering also that her own condumight be held as singular, she turne her companion over to the head porte of the hotel and hurried away to h own room.

Apparently the disfigured strange remained at the hotel that night for when, at eleven of the following mon ing, Kitty Gray emerged, properly a rayed for a morning ride, she sa the stranger in the hotel lobby, he face swathed in bandages. He seems to be waiting for her approach, spok to her some words in a tongue which she did not understand-then change to French-and then to English.

"If mademoiselle would permit ma he said, "I might be of use, even I am. I know the city. Might I ad as courier for the time? I wou show my gratitude, if mademoisel regards it as proper for me thus to Kitty Gray, actuated by no definit purpose, but governed by the impuls which she trusted in her trade, turns suddenly toward the curb where ston her hired motor car, and motione to the man to enter.

They passed on down the wide av nue of the capital, a strange count enough. Kitty looked curiously about her, studiously examining everythin she saw. Yes, the old city was beaut ful, with its long lines of green trees its stately edifices built by hands lon stilled in death. Sensational Game Here on Sunday Was Won By the High School By Score 3-0.

Deming football fans were treated last Saturday to one of the best and most evenly contested football games ever witnesed on a local field when the Deming High school defeated the second team of the A. & M. College of New Mexico, 3 to 0. The . nly score of the game was the one made in the final quarter when Captain Clark sent a drop kick from the thirty-yard line at a very acute angle square between the posts.

The big sensation of the game was the work of "Peanuts" Robbins, left half for the High School Although this was really his first game, on the first run he circled the Aggie end for twenty yards and he kept this clip up the entire game. He outran his interference a number of times, and made the most consistent long runs in the history of Deming footbal. His work in his first game labels him as one of the best backs Deming has ever put forth, and if he keeps up at his present rate he will not have a peer end running by the time the setson closes. Captain Clark, on the other hand did great gaining but his work was somewhat overshadowed by the wonderful running of Robbins. Clark contributed the winning score by his wonderful and
