Among themselves they said "Our craft is in danger"; but that might not have been of much ap-peal to people unconcerned about their profits. So they made a re-ligious issue of it, concealing their personal interest and stirring up prejudice, by crying that the great goddess and her temple were be-ing despised, and her magnificence lisher of the Higgins News, bas destroyed. Their ruse worked. The interesting story is old. but ever new. Never, when great reprise and got out his first issue forms are planned, or effort is of that paper last week, and judging by that initial issue, unmade to suppress vice, or antisocial practices, are these things der Mr. Broadley's management defended for what they are. It is not so long ago that the most ardent advocates of liquor were decrying the saloon, and giving the strongest assurances that it would never return. But the rallying cry was about "personal liberty." The gambling interests today have entrenched themselves around the taxes they pay for old age pen-sions, and if profits from doubtful things can arrange for taxes to go for schools, or for some other socially worthy project, their de fense is secure. Disreputable businesses shelter themselves around what will happen to reputable business if they are suppressed.
