FAMILIES IN CAMP AREA URGED TO TAKE STEPS FOR MOVING BY MAY 1

IN "SOME INSTANCES" MOVING MUST BE DONE IN 15 DAYS

Yesterday, General A. D. Bruce, commander of the Tank Destroyer Tactical and Firing Center, told the News Monday, March 2, that ALL the folks in the Camp area should be prepared to move by May 1, and in the actual cantonment and the proposed "tented" area north of the camp, they should be prepared to move, in some instances, possibly within 15 days.

This is because of the urgency of the war situation and developments are taking place rapidly to effect the immediate training for the thousands of men who come to Camp Hood for specialized instruction in tank destruction.

General Bruce said, when asked with reference to the interview given to the Temple Daily Telegram last week, about being prepared to move right away: "his opinion was everyone must plan to be out by May 1, and in some instances before that."

"Also, the main object of getting right of entry now, was to have legal right to run a road across pastures or in some cases, removal of buildings in order to construct the camp site."

"Authorities", he said, "may in some instances have to give 15 days notice before May 1, but this would not be the rule."

Also, in talking to Gen. Bruce,

DEPUTY COLLECTORS HERE TODAY, HELP ON INCOME TAX RETURNS

Today, Deputy Collectors, R. K. Peters and W. W. Webb will be at the National Bank of Gatesville to help people of this locality in filing their income tax returns.

A great many more returns will be filed this year than in previous years, and a great many more people will find it necessary to ask questions regarding their exemptions, allowable deductions, etc.

This year, single people who make $750.00 must file and married persons making $1,500 also must file returns, whether they pay or not.

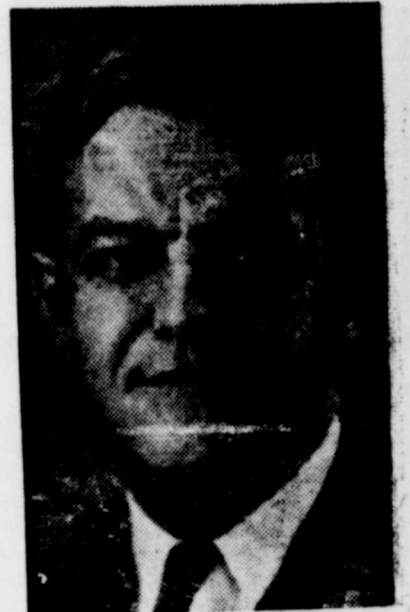

Mrs. C. H. House of Mart was a guest of Mrs. Doc Rutherford the latter part of the week.

Erwin H. Splitts of Waco spent the week end in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Martin, and Mrs. Splitts, who had spent the past week with her parents, returned home with him Sunday.

he said "he was fully aware of the difficulties of farmers and ranchers of removing livestock, and particular lambing sheep, and he would make recommendations accordingly." He said he'd been behind a plow and knew something of the farm and ranch troubles especially at this time of the year.

When asked about the reports of dissatisfaction of landowners with appraisal prices of land, General Bruce said he has no official authority over the purchase of land or acquisition of property.

He stressed particularly: "My only official position is to advise the land department of the army of the military requirements of the tank destroyer forces."

BRIG. GEN. A. D. BRUCE

Because of the requirements for shelter and headquartering of troops prior to the construction of the cantonment proper, General Bruce stated that it has become necessary to survey the improvements in the area which might be useful from a military standpoint, before making any recommendations to release any more improvements. Releases of improvements was stopped by the war department Monday when it was learned that possible use of a portion of the area would be made for artillery range firing, necessitating possible radical changes in plans.

There will be a meeting of the range board at Killeen, Friday at which time a preliminary report on the contemplated use of the maneuver area will be made.

As soon as this report is approved, which should be less than a week, General Bruce can probably definitely advise which improvements can be released.

WASHINGTON NEWS
FROM OUR CONGRESSMAN
W. R. POAGE

I believe that there is an increasing recognition here in Washington of the fact that in order to win this war we must take the offensive. Of course, an offensive campaign involves risks. It may involve serious losses, but as I see it, a strictly defensive policy makes serious losses certain. We can never expect to be so overwhelmingly strong that we can have superior forces at every point the world over which might be subject to attack. We have naval and air superiority along our own Atlantic coast today, but we cannot prevent the Germans from finding and sinking a number of unarmed and unescorted ships. The Japs have a similar superiority along their own coast, but I cannot believe that they could prevent American submarines from inflicting serious injury to their shipping if we would but press the attack home. And after all, Japan is just as dependent on shipping as we are. They have long lines of communications that they must keep open in order to keep their offensive going in the South Pacific.

By attacking their shipping lanes and even their islands we not only effectively relieve the pressure on the Dutch and the Australians and enable them to more easily defend their lands, we secure the great advantage of being able to concentrate our forces at a point of our own choosing and meeting the enemy at a point where he has not been able to concentrate his forces. So far we have fought only defensive actions. Possibly this has been necessary, but to win we must take the offensive ourselves. With the coming of spring in Europe, great offensive actions are certain. If we simply wait for the blow to fall without knowing where the enemy will strike we are almost certain to be defeated. I desperately hope that we will be able to do the striking this spring. I believe that the President's recent statements indicate that he holds the same views. Certainly he has made it clear that the pacifist Senators who did not want this country to prepare and who now want us to keep our ships, our men and our planes at home to defend our own shores, are urging a policy that will in the long run make that defense most difficult. Had America realized two years ago how important it was to keep the war away from America we would be in a much happier condition today.

One other item that recalls our past mistakes that should be all means be avoided in the future is the recent evidence that the Vichy French have used American supplies to enable them to supply the German army in North Africa and probably more recently the German submarines off the coast of Northern South America. It should also be remembered that had not the French government welcomed the Japs in French Indo China it would have been impossible for Japan to strike at the Philippines and the Indies as they have. In short, Vichy France has opened the door for most of the de-verses that the Democracies have suffered that past two years. I can't see why we don't stop trading with them. I know that the same people who now say we should send food and oil to French North Africa, to Martineque, etc., wanted us to trade with Japan right up to December 7, 1941. They said that we shouldn't offend Japan. They now say we shouldn't offend Vichy France. I think we should have a show-down. I don't believe that appeasement ever paid, and I don't believe that it will now pay. If we don't take a firm stand with Vichy France, I expect to see the French fleet attack us at the time it can do us the most damage, just as the Japs did. I think we should "scotch" this danger while we can—not let it get worse each day as we did with Japan.

I realize that the above is but the idea of a "curbstone admiral" and that Congress, like the rest of the nation, must rely on and follow the State Department and the Army and Navy in these matters, but we do feel a tremendous interest just as each of you do. In the meantime, we continue to do the one thing that we must do, and which no one else can do—that is to appropriate money to carry on the war. Each week I feel that we will surely never again have a single bill carrying so much money. Now I am ready to admit that I don't know how large these bills may get. The Army bill we passed this week was as large as the entire national debt at the end of the first World War.

ELECTRIC POWER helps build America's FIGHTING POWER

Electric power on the production line helps put fighting power on the battle front. It takes power—and plenty of it—to produce the planes, tanks, ships and guns we need, but America has a lot. More than Germany, Italy and Japan combined. Enough to insure an arms output that will eventually engulf our enemies.

America has this power because America's privately-owned, business-managed electric companies looked ahead. They were ready at the start of our armament program with a reserve power capacity averaging 35% above normal requirements. And they have continued to provide new capacity as new demands have been foreseen. In 1941 over 2½ million horsepower of new generating equipment was added. Another 3½ million is scheduled for completion this year.

We are proud to be part of an industry that has been able to make such a valuable contribution to the nation's war effort. America's business-managed power companies are exerting every effort to meet the urgent demands of defense and at the same time take care of civilian needs.

SIDE GLANCES ON TEXAS HISTORY

By Charles O. Hucker University of Texas Library

ROASTED ALLIGATOR TAIL Legend and history of Texas are full of man's ingenuity in devising rare dishes in his extremities — squeezing the juice from cactus for drink, frying rattlesnake steaks and so on.

But it remained for a sailor named Jack, accompanying the family of Dr. Johnson Hunter of Missouri, to tackle a Taylor's Bayou alligator, kill it, cut off the tail and roast it to feed a hungry family.

This experience is recounted by Hunter's son, in a little volume of reminiscences entitled "Narrative of Robert Hancock Hunter, 1813-1902," written about 1860, and published a few years ago by Buelah Gayle Green. A copy of this book is found in the University of Texas Library's 30,000-volume Texas Collection.

STORMY WEATHER

The Hunter family, according to the editor, was perhaps the first of Stephen F. Austin's colonist's to settle within the present limits of Harris County. Sailing in a scow the colonists found a little schooner on the beach of San Jacinto Bay and appropriated it, tying their boat behind before sailing for Galveston.

In simple and vigorous if somewhat unlettered prose, Hunter described their voyage: "While out a peace, a south east gale blowed up, & we come on untill about 8 or 9 o'clock, when our scow broke loss & went a shore, & we come on to the mouth of, what is now called Taylor's Bayou. There we campt."

DISASTER AND HUNGER

But the temporary abandonment of the scow proved permanent, for when "Pa., Hunter and "Jack our Saylor" returned to rescue the provisions and belongings they were too late.

"When they got there, Old Yokham & about 30 men was there, & no scow, & the men all drunk on Pas rum," Hunter wrote. "He had a barrel of rum on the scow, & he had to come away the best he could, & got nothing. He lost everything we had.

"Pa got back the next evening, he was gone two days, & we had nothing to eat. Jack kild an alligator, & rost the tale, & we ate it, & not a drop of water to drink. Pa saved 4 trunks, out of the scow, & in one of them was bolt of domestic. Pa took it, and spread it out on the grass, and got it wet with due, & rung it in a bucket & that don us untill we got to Galveston that evening."

Mr. Ward Burris, Sports Editor, The Express, San Antonio, Texas.

Dear Wardie:

I think what the Nation's morale needs most is less oratory and more walkin' on hind legs. Some guys what's a talkin' the most about what sports needs takes their heavy exercise a liftin' a cocktail glass, playin' checkers and neckin'.

I guess our morale needs some place to go to to whoop and holler and get some entertainment. But entertainment and exercise is different. At one you get the seat of your pants slick and at the other you find out yore legs and feet are made for somethin' else besides to hang on top of a desk.

Its a goin' to be too bad fer some of our high powered sportsmen when they find a shortage of artificial bait and has got to go to diggin' fishin' worms again. They ain't no shortage there, but you got to dig.

As I said, watchin' sports is all right fer what it is supposed to do for morale, but for exercise, well, I ain't heerd of nobody a reducin' a pot belly by eatin' hot dogs, peanuts and pop corn and a yellin' at empires and referees.

What this country needs to get in shape is more vacant lot baseball, in daylight savin' evenin's, more one eyed cat, touch football, black man, kick the picket, stink base, leap frog and foot-and-a-half. Sich things as that'll make this country tougher than the credit man at a pari-mutels window at Alamo Downs in the good old days.

Some of the big Daniel Boones is a goin' to have to shoot 22's instead of shotguns, too, because of powder shortage, which will give the little rabbits, squirrels, etcetera, a chanct to go on a raisin' a family instead of hittin' the stew pot. I'll be a seein' you Pal. Keep 'em Flyin'.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS
Domini Enfield, on a visit to the Algerian desert, meets and marries the mysterious Boris Androvsky, who is strangely reticent about his past. She is supremely happy with him on their honeymoon in the desert, until they meet up with a young French officer, who seems to recognize Boris and to recoil from him. Domini learns the truth about her husband. He is a Trappist monk who has broken his vows and fled from the monastery.

Chapter Six

"I believe we have some in the camp," said Domini. Boris started to speak, but Batouch said, "Yes, Madame, I'll bring it."

Anteoni began to tell the story of the liqueur, watching the effect of what he said on his listeners. It was made, he told them, at the Trappist Monastery of El-Lagarni the only product of the vineyards there. But now it had a special value because when all the extant stock was gone, there would be no more Lagarnine. It seemed that the secret of its manufacture belonged to one monk only, who was supposed to confide it on his deathbed to another whom he had chosen. But quite recently, the monk who had the secret had left the monastery, disappeared.

"Do you mean he left it — a Trappist monk?" asked Domini, deeply shocked at the idea. "After taking the final vows? How horrible! How could a man do such a thing?"

"Why not?" snapped Boris. "Anteoni spoke in measured tones. 'Why not? A man who had taken vows — a man who had made the most sacred of marriages — a marriage to the Church? He could not be happy in the world for long, Monsieur. There must be anguish in that man, there must be despair such as few men have known.'"

"No! Why should he be in despair? Why?" Boris insisted. "Because he knows inside himself he has no right to the delights of the world."

"Why shouldn't he have? How can you judge? I tell you he has a right to live as other men — to love as other men love."

Domini looked at him, knowing now the grim truth. To a woman as devout as she and as completely in love, there could be no greater shock than the realization that the man she had married was a Trappist monk. She watched Boris as he rose, stumbled to the door. He stood there a moment with his back to them, his arms outflung and grabbing at the flap of the tent almost as if for support. Then he dropped his arms to his sides and went out into the desert.

Domini followed him with her eyes. As he went out, she started to follow him, then stood in the doorway where he had stood, dazed, staring after him like one in a trance. Anteoni came up behind her.

"Domini," he said, "if it were any other woman, I should never have interfered. But knowing you and your faith, I thought you would prefer to know."

"Yes, I prefer to know." "All my life I shall regret that it was from me you learned the truth. I am going deep into the desert — perhaps never to return. Goodbye, Domini."

"Goodbye." Her eyes were on Boris, and as Anteoni went to his horse, she followed her husband to where he knelt, silhouetted against the night sky on the sand dunes. He saw her coming.

"Domini! Domini!" he cried in anguish. "Why did you do it, Boris? Why?"

"How can I explain? — How can I?" "Were the vows too hard to keep?"

"No, Domini, no! For years I kept them, gladly, proudly." He began to speak more calmly as if the act of confession were giving him some of the peace he had sought so long. "Even as a boy I was very devout. It seemed to me — it seemed to all my family — that I should give up the world. I was still very young when I went into the monastery. I was at peace there. I was happy."

"Happy, Boris?" "It was a lonely sort of happiness, yes — but it was happiness. When it came time to take the eternal vows, I did not hesitate. It never occurred to me to go out again into the world as many novices did. I worked in the fields, in the garden. I lived in the sun and the rain — I worked close to the earth day after day. And at night there was the long plain chapel where I prayed — where God seemed very near. I was happy."

"What could have happened to take all that away from you?" Domini was deeply moved by the beautiful and peaceful expression that came over his face as he talked.

"When the old Abbe died, the new Abbe put me in charge of the little hotelierie where visitors are received. He absolved me from the vow of silence. For the first time in years I saw and talked with people from the world. For the first time since I was a child, I listened to the voices of — women."

"I talked with a man who was tortured by his love for a woman. His talk of this woman, day after day of her beauty, of his agony, robbed me of my own peace. Then one day the woman came to the monastery seeking him out. I saw them rush into each other's arms. Their faces were the faces of angels."

"At night — alone in my cell — I began to think of what I had seen — of all the things that were denied to me forever. I would look out over the monastery walls toward the lights of the city and think: 'They are living there, those people — living!' I fought desperately, week after week, to conquer this feeling, but at last it conquered me. I fled from the monastery." His voice grew intense, anguished. "But I never lived, Domini. I was tortured by the thought of what I had done. Then I met you."

"Domini, I tried to tell you — I tried to give you up. I couldn't! Domini, speak to me — what can we do — what?" "I don't know, Boris. I don't know. But this I do know — no one is bad who loves. God will not punish us, Boris — if you — if we — can trust Him to show us the way."

Next morning the caravan started the long journey back to Beni-Mora. They were days and nights of torture for both of them. When they reached the town where they had first known happiness, Domini went to the hotel. Boris went to Father Roubier's church.

From the balcony she saw him returning a few hours later. The look on his face, a look almost of joy, told her that his mind was at last at peace.

"Boris, you needn't tell me. It's in your face." "Domini, you know what I have to do, don't you?" "Yes. How far is it to the monastery?"

"A few hours —" "A few hours —" "A lifetime."

They traveled to Tunis by train. Father Roubier and Batouch came to the station to bid them farewell.

At the hotel, by the railway station in Tunis, Boris went up to the desk.

"Can you arrange for a carriage to El-Lagarni?" "The Trappist monastery? Certainly, Monsieur," said the clerk. "Would you care to wait in the private parlor?"

They walked slowly into a bare, tawdry little room, the desolation of which seemed to accentuate their own emotion. Boris reached out his hand to her, but as he did, Domini withdrew ever so slightly.

"Please — you must not touch me. I am trying to be strong. Please don't make it any harder."

"How can I bear to give you up?" "Boris, we know this isn't all. It can't be. And surely in that other world — the real and lasting world — we shall be together forever."

"But in this world — ?" "The happiness you found in the monastery — you will find it again, Boris. Perhaps if you try not to think of me — ?"

"No, Domini, no! I will love you always — to the end of my life. I was born perhaps to serve God, but I dare to believe that I was also born that I might know your beauty and your tenderness. Since I have been able to pray again, I have asked God to forgive me for loving you, for in knowing your love, I have known Him."

A coachman entered. "The carriage, Madame, Monsieur."

At the outer gate of the monastery, the carriage stopped and Boris got out. Their eyes said their farewells. Then he started to walk down the long, arched driveway to the entrance of the monastery. Domini watched him for a few seconds. Then she cried to the coachman, "Drive back to Tunis!"

"Madame?" "Drive back! Drive back!"

The coachman obeyed, and the carriage turned around and started on its way. It disappeared around a curve in a cloud of dust.

Boris straightened, and his stride became more rapid as he approached the doorway to El-Lagarni.

HORNETS WIN REGION 3 TITLE

Win Final Tilt, 26-22, Saturday Night

By JOHN FRANK POST
News Sports Editor

A valiant, scrapping band of Hornet basketballers are now undisputed cage champions of Region 3, despite all that Dame Fortune and a never-say-die Nocona quintet could do to halt their onrush.

In this crucial series, the Hornets showed beyond a doubt that they are made of championship stuff. When the going was the roughest, the Golden Boys were at their best. First they invaded Nocona and whipped the Indians on their home court, 40-36, which in itself was a remarkable feat. They returned home and faced a red hot Indian team that was battling for survival, minus the services of Gordon Thornton, big pivot man who tallied eight points in the opening encounter, but a sore knee kept him from even suiting up for the game here. The crippled locals played their hearts out, only to drop a heart-breaking 24-23 decision in an overtime period, thus necessitating a third and deciding game to be played in TCU's field house. Early Saturday morning it was learned that Thornton was unable to even make the trip, but it was a determined team that traveled to Fort Worth Saturday. With little Lengefeld capably filling in for the injured Thornton, the Gatesville squad took a thrilling 26-22 win from the Indians to cop the title.

Indians Smooth Ball-handlers

The entire team played great ball Saturday night, with Manning counting eight points, Blanchard 6, and Wilkinson, Geibler, and Lengefeld four apiece to evenly share the scoring. Downey, a flashy guard who starred for the Indians, netted twelve to win scoring honors.

Nocona flashed the greatest ball-handling high school club that we have ever seen. Paced by Shropshire and Downey, the Red shirts were always in the thick of the battle. They were by far the best team the Hornets have met all year.

The championship finale was close all the way, and the Hornets were leading by one slim point with only fifteen seconds to play remaining. An over-anxious Indian flagrantly fouled the Hornets' Blanchard and the tall blonde sank it easily. A hurried Nocona pass was intercepted by Bill Man-

Ireland Goes To Semi-Finals In Denton Meet

Ireland's Cardinals were eliminated in the regional tournament at Denton by a fine Slidell team which went on to win the regional crown after defeating the Coryell County boys in the semi-finals, 38-16. This was the closest game the champions had during the entire meet, drawing an opening round bye, defeating Lorena 42-14 in the second round, and romping through Post Oak for a 42-12 win in the finals.

ning, who quickly fired it to Geibler under the goal for a cinch crip as the game ended.

Score Tied at Half

The score was tied 8-8 at the end of the first half, and the locals moved ahead 18-16 at the end of the third frame. Field goals by Downey, Smith and Shropshire gave the Nocona club a 22-21 lead with about three minutes to go, but they could not protect that lead. Blanchard slipped in for a crip to put the Hornets back on top, and this, coupled with his gratis throw and Geibler's crip, gave the Golden Boys their four-point decision.

These two fine teams staged one of the best court battles ever witnessed by local fandom here Friday night. The locals opened fast and were leading 8-4 after five minutes of play during which Blanchard bucketed three long shots. That was as far ahead as either team was during the entire contest. The intricate Indian attack began clicking, and they whittled the Hornet's margin down to 12-10 at the end of the first stanza and cut it to 14-13 at halftime. Pruitt's lads still retained that one point lead at the end of the third quarter, the score being 19-18. Blanchard sank two gratis throws in the opening minutes of the final session, but Downey tossed in a long one for Nocona and it was 21-20, Manning netted a beautiful shot from outside the free throw circle to give the locals a 23-20 margin with only three minutes of playing time remaining, and the Hornet fans began breathing easy for the first time. But the persistent Redshirts would not quit. Downey made two gift shots and then Hanson meshed another to knot the count 23-all and it stayed that way until the final whistle. In the three-minute overtime period Smith sank a free shot to give the Nocona boys a well-earned one-point victory.

Blanchard Stars

Cotton Blanchard was the outstanding star of the series. He roped sixteen points in the opening game, fourteen in the second and six in the final for a series total of 36 points. Manning played his usual sterling brand of ball throughout all three games, but was exceptionally brilliant in the pay-off fray at Fort Worth, racking up eight markers besides playing a great floor game. Wilkinson was a ball hawker in both frays, tying up the speedy scarlet-shirted ball-handlers time and time again. Speedy Pete Geibler and little Lengefeld turned in great performances in the three tilts.

The Hornets will now move to Austin Thursday for the state meet. Just who their opening round opponent will be is not yet known.

HORNETTES PREPARING TO GO TO STATE MEET FOR 4TH TIME

For the fourth time in as many years, Gatesville's Hornettes are busily engaged preparing for the annual girls state meet, which this year will be held in Hillsboro.

When the girls league was first organized four years ago and the first tournament was held in the McLean gym at Baylor, a powerful Gatesville sextette boasting such stars as Margaret Weaver, Zoraida Thomasson, and Leta Bell Shoaf conquered all comers to walk off with the state title. That was in 1939. In 1940 and 1941 the Hornettes sent strong teams to Waco, and both reached the quarterfinals before they were eliminated.

Now the Hornettes are ready to try once more, after defeating every team in this section to grab the district title. Boasting a brilliant trio of guards in Lester, Mueller and Black, the local lassies hope to copy the feat of the 1939 outfit.

The tournament will get underway Thursday afternoon, with 16 district champions entered. Ennis, last year's titleholder, lost all their stars via graduation and did not make it back to the tourney, thus throwing the race wide open.

Pairings for the opening round games have not been made, so it is not known who the Hornettes will tackle in their initial contest.

YOUR AND MY

In the event of failure to make and file an income tax return as required by law in the prescribed time, a certain percent of the amount of the tax is required to be added to the tax unless failure to file the return within the prescribed time is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to be due to some reasonable cause and not to willful neglect.

The amount to be added to the tax is 5 percent if the failure is for more than thirty days, with an additional 5 percent for each additional thirty days or fraction thereof during which failure to file a return continues, not to exceed 25 percent in the aggregate.

A taxpayer who files a tardy return and wishes to avoid the addition to the tax for delinquency must make an affirmative showing all the facts, alleged as a reasonable cause for failure to file the return on time, in the form of an affidavit which should be attached to the return. Alleged ignorance of the law does not constitute reasonable cause for delinquency.

Taxpayers should make every effort to file their returns within the time prescribed by law and thus avoid the possibility of the additions to the tax for delinquency in filing returns.
