"FUSTEST WITH

THE MOSTEST"

little 'g' gatesville, Texas

Either the banks are good, or the citizens got dough.

In the county Tax Assessor-Collector Creston Brazzil reports 90.6 percent of his 'take' has been took.

City Secretary Eiland Lovejoy says also up to the 1st, they got 93 percent of his'n.

At the GISD office the report is 82.33 or a total of $99,278.87. Supplementary and redemption taxes with above total is $140,406.35.

As for as the 'polls' you candidates, they got in Creston's office 3,729 for you to hand cards to — we'd like to print 'em—, and there are 7 or 800 'exemptions' who need cards —we print 'em— and about 25 unders who you want to 'cultivate' and they'll need cards. Total job for each candidate, if they only give one card away is 4,554, but with waste duplication, and other causes, we'd better print each of you about 10,000 cards. Folks like a card, and we print 'em. And, it ain't long, either.

Choice of 6 books and 100 issues of the 'County News' for $3.00 is about all you could expect. We don't know how much the books originally sell for, and they're not the news stand "paper backs" but, we don't imagine you could touch 'em for $3.00. Looks like you're going to get a bargain when you get a 700 plus book and 800 pages of THE NEWS for $3.00. No other paper in Coryell County can or does even approach an offer like this. And the NEWS is twice a week —News while it is News! Can't be beat.

"People will sit up and take notice of you if you will sit up and take notice of what makes them sit up and take notice."

PROGRESS IN GLASS

The glass industry in recent decades has become a basic industry in almost all industrial societies. Where formerly it was confined to specialized uses and employed mainly skilled technicians or artisans, the industry now produces a number of large volume products which are vital to most of our mass production industries. The industry is characterized by a superabundant supply of raw materials coupled with a relatively high cost of production facilities. The high capital costs of production facilities tend to dissuade newcomers from entering the field.

Glass is varied in its application, but the industry can generally be subdivided into the following segments: containers and housewares, window and plate glass, glass fibers, and specialty glass. Although some companies operate in only one segment of the industry, most of them are represented in two or more.

The record of the glass container industry over the last two decades manifests impressive growth as well as stamina and ingenuity in the face of competition from these other industries. Domestic shipments in 1958 were 166% above the 1940 level and 104% on per capita basis while total growth in metal containers, for instance, was roughly 117% between 1940 and 1958. The success of the glass container industry in meeting the severe competition is in large measure the result of the large sums spent for research over the past ten years, approximately $100-million. Window and plate glass are mainly directed to the construction and automobile industries. Here also, above-average expansion in usage has been demonstrated over the years, reflecting the trend toward more glass edifices and cars. Glass has become increasingly desirable because of its low, stable cost. Glass fibers are the Cinderella of the industry and they have probably the greatest growth potential. Developed in the early 1930's, total sales of glass fibers in 1958 were only $3.6 million. This year Owens-Corning, the dominant factor, will alone record sales of over $200-million. In the specialty glass field, such products as laboratory equipment, radio tubes and light bulbs are prominent. Television picture tube blanks are also an important category, together with glass building blocks.

The following glass companies offer attractive potential: Corning Glass Works, Libby-Owens-Ford, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, American St. Gobain, Owens-Illinois, Thatcher Glass, Anchor Hocking and Owens-Corning.

TREND REVERSED

The Toronto Globe and Mail has drawn attention to a reversal of movement across the border stretches between Canada and the United States. Whereas for many years graduates from Canadian colleges flocked from Canada to the United States to take university teaching positions, the movement is now in the opposite direction.

The migration to the U. S. A. was because Uncle Sam offered better paying positions. But today the salary level at some Canadian universities runs higher by $2500 more than comparable teaching positions south of the border. Salaries at the University of Toronto are on a level with those of Harvard, Yale and Princeton - full professors receiving from $12,000 to $16,000, with an average of approximately $14,000. While not all Canadian institutions of higher education are paying that well, the trend continues upwards.

As a result, Canadians are beginning to return home and quite a few American educators are leaving teaching positions in the U. S. A. to take on better paying jobs in the Dominion.

The boot is certainly now on the other foot. While U. S. A. colleges and universities are experiencing considerable difficulty in raising salaries, our friends to the north somehow are managing a good neighbor, and is one that should be most welcome to college professors in both countries - who admittedly have been grossly underpaid. It should also attract more and better men and women to embrace the teaching profession.

"FOUNDER'S DAY" TO BE OBSERVED BY P-TA AT GHS MONDAY EVENING

"Founder's Day" will be emphasized by the local P-TA when it meets in Gatesville High School Auditorium Monday evening, Feb. 8, at 7:30 p. m.

Entertainment will be by the High School Junior Class Chorus which will sing several numbers with Miss Mary Catherine Winslar accompanying on the piano.

A panel discussion will be led by Floyd Zeigler, and there will be a 6-member panel composed of Supt. L. C. McKamie, Hal Anderson, Horace Jackson Sr., Rev. Fred Galbraith, Mr. J. T. Ayres and Mrs. Crawford Coott, and the discussion will be on: "The Responsibility of the Home, School, Church and Community Toward our Youth."

MORAN, KANS., SENTINEL: "John L. Lewis's cheerful acceptance of automata was thing that distinguished him the most as a union leader and it was mainly responsible for the present amicable relations that exist today between the mine workers and the owners."

"Curiously, even in his most turbulent days, John L. Lewis was never accused of dishonesty. Not one cent of shabby money ever touched his fingers. While other union treasuries were being looted by the bosses, The United Mine Workers remained notably free of corruption."

BEEVILLE, TEX., BEE, PICA-YUNE: "The fate of our nation rests upon you and the people you influence. If you want to make a quick buck above all else, if you would trade security for freedom, if you have lost the moral fibre of your ancestors, our nation is in grave danger. For in a free world you do your choosing as to leaders, but they cannot put meaning or purpose or moral standards into your lives. That is up to you. The fate of the world is within each of us."

BOB POAGE

Dear Friends:

Some time ago I introduced what I think was the first of a series of bills providing government loans to needy college students. I, of course, had in mind helping both the individual student by enabling him to get an education, which would increase his earning capacity and also help our country to get more educated people. I did not feel that it was necessary to ask college students to take any oath of allegiance—I realized that traitors are also liars, and that one who planned to injure his country would not hesitate to misrepresent the facts. I tried to guard against this by requiring local recommendations of the students from people who knew them.

The Committee took my bill and combined its provisions with other bills. Finally Congress passed legislation which provides not only for loans (which I still think are best), but also for government gifts. The bill as passed provides that each recipient of such gift or loan should state under oath that he believes in our form of government and will support it. The oath is almost exactly like the one I take when I file as a candidate. I am not only willing but proud to take such an oath. I cannot understand an American who objects to affirming his loyalty to our country.

Recently, several large Eastern universities and some of their students have taken the position that such an oath was a reflection on their loyalty and an "infringement of academic freedom"—whatever that means. More recently, I have had several communications from students in at least one of these universities asking Congress to remove the loyalty requirement. Logically, I suppose, they would also prohibit the pledge of allegiance in our public schools.

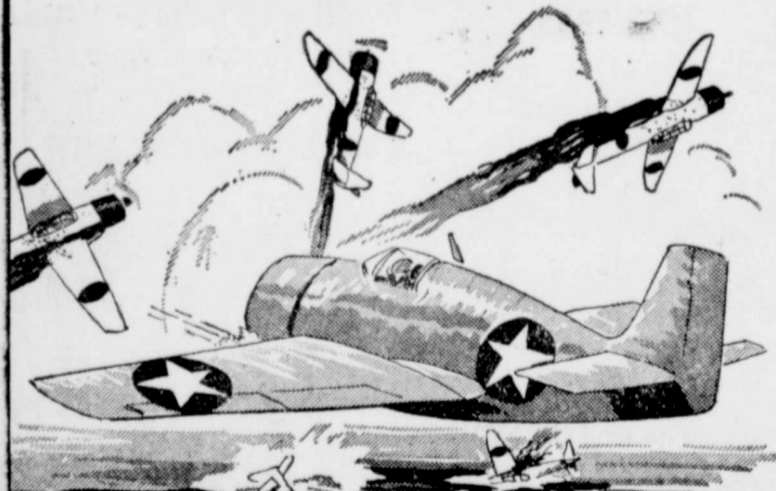

While I don't think the oath is very effective for the reasons I have pointed out, I do feel that since they have made it an issue that it would be most unfortunate to repeal this provision. If any school, or any student, feels that it places a stigma upon him to proclaim his loyalty to his country, he can avoid the "stigma" simply by rejecting the aid that the government has offered—I can't understand how anyone could be willing to accept aid from a government to which he refuses to promise to support. Surely, our government has nothing to gain by financing study in an institution, or by a student who finds it embarrassing to affirm his support of our government. The attitude of these schools may make it possible for us to transfer more money where it is wanted and to help more men and women in other schools who are proud of the Stars and Stripes.

JACKRABBIT PART OF FAMILY

Buster, a pet jackrabbit, of the Shep Neal family in Wichita Falls, takes his turn at the family television set. He will watch the tube for hours. (AP Photo) WICHITA FALLS, Tex. Jan. 28, (AP)—The Shep Neal's jackrabbit thinks he's kinfold, or at least the family housedog.

Buster is a television fan and will park himself in front of the set or stretch out on the sofa and watch the tube for hours.

He has his own sand box in the bathroom, takes an occasional nap on a bed or chair, and in general takes possession of the house as if he were a pampered resident, which in fact he is.

Buster has been raised to refute an old claim that jackrabbits cannot live in a home in captivity.

He was obtained from a farm last July when he was just a baby. He refused to eat, but Neal thrust an eyedropper filled with food into his mouth, squeezed and then rubbed Buster's throat to force him to swallow.

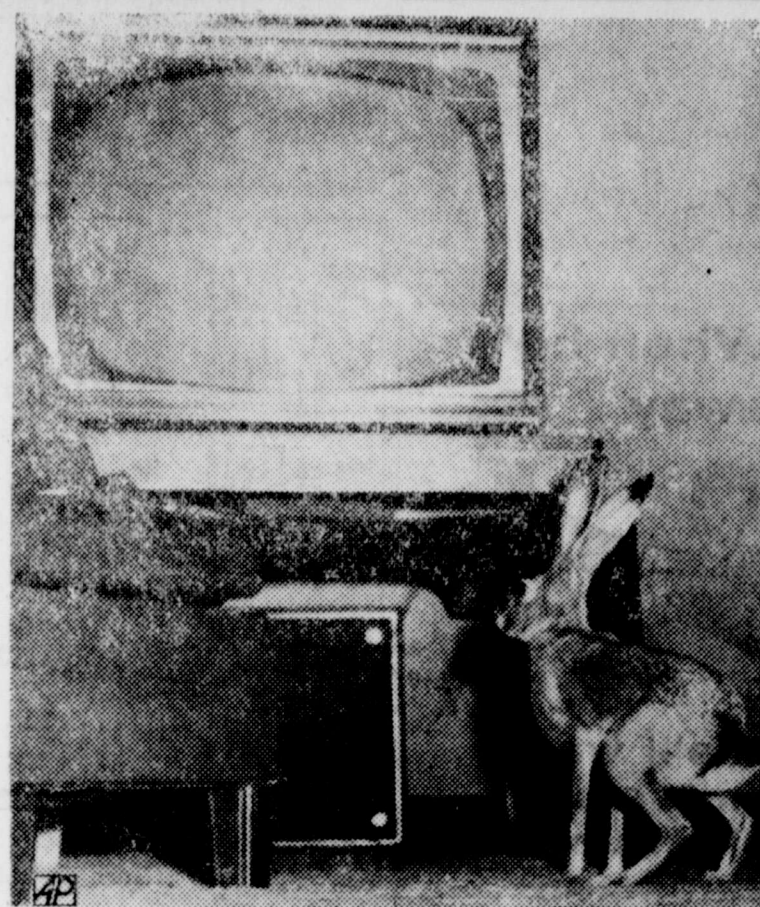

"He is the craziest thing you ever saw," Neal says. "He is affectionate, mischievous and is worse than any cat or dog to devil you."

From a sitting position, he will suddenly leap five or six feet straight up into the air as if on springs. When surprised, he will leap and perhaps do a couple of flips before he hits the floor.

When Neal is taking a nap, Buster will leap upon his stomach to wake him. Buster eats food pellets or oatmeal and will wait impatiently for Neal to come home to feed him rye bread.

He has eaten most of a plastic fly swatter but he refused to touch lettuce and carrots, legendary food for rabbits.

He drives Neal frantic by con-

WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS" BY C. WILSON HARDER

Probably one of the wierdest decisions in its history was handed down by Federal Trade Commission in case against Shell, Texaco and Atlantic Refining Company and Goodyear, Goodrich, and Firestone.

The three oil companies were ordered to stop coercing their dealers to handle only certain brands of tires, batteries and other accessories.

The testimony was quite strong that these major oil companies used very vigorous methods in forcing their dealers, or service station operators leasing their stations, to handle only items approved by the major oil firms.

In addition, the testimony further developed that in a typical year of 1955, the major oil companies were paid commissions ranging from 7 to 10%. For example Shell received $3.4 million from two tire firms, Texaco $4.8 million.

Now comes the strange part of the FTC findings. Although the oil companies were ordered to stop coercing the service station operators, the FTC could find nothing wrong with the conduct of the major rubber companies in giving these special discounts to the oil firms.

The FTC position was that the major oil firms earned these commissions by performing certain services. These great services were such as recommending to the service station operator that he handle tires and other accessory items as a means of getting more revenue into the station. Another great and valuable promotion aid was extended by the major oil companies in suggesting to station operators methods of displaying these items.

Another service performed was that of the oil company salesman calling on the service stations with the favored rubber company salesmen.

Other testimony developed that the oil company salesmen often told the service station operators what tires and accessories they could handle, or else.

But for these "promotional" services, FTC found oil companies earned millions paid them by big rubber.

This decision is bound to cause some bitter debate in Congress when it convenes shortly. The Senate Small Business Committee, headed by Sen. John Sparkman, has already taken cognizance of the matter.

It will perhaps be called FTC's great Pollyana decision.

After all, if the major oil companies are to continue to receive these huge commissions from the rubber companies, they will have to continue to send out their salesmen, to talk to station operators on behalf of the rubber firms paying commissions to the company.

Thus, the anti-coercion phase of the order is most likely to fall by the wayside.

For who, but FTC, can be naive to believe an oil company salesman, charged with getting certain tires and batteries into service stations handling his oil and gas, will confine his activities to gentle persuasive argument . . . especially when he has a quota to meet?

TODAY'S 2-MINUTE MYSTERY

THE CASE OF THE PERFECT JEWELS

By Donald J. Sobel

Archibald Van Tiff, head of the world famous jewelry firm, leaned back weakly in his chair as he spoke of the theft of the diamond necklace earlier that morning.

"The necklace was insured for half a million, but money can't replace it," he lamented.

Haledjian asked about the seemingly faultless necklace which was lying on the jeweler's desk.

"Glass," grunted Van Tiff. "But curving staircase.

"The real necklace and the fake necklace are kept on the second floor in a vault. Shortly after 10, Mr. Van Tiff asked me to bring the imitation to his office. I had just started downstairs with it when three masked men came charging up.

"One of them grabbed the imitation necklace, fingered it, cursed, and hurled it onto the floor. At gun point they then forced me to open the vault and give them the real necklace."

"Can you tell the two necklaces apart?" asked Haledjian.

Not with the naked eye. The real necklace is always kept in the cotton drawer of the vault," replied Milcross.

Mr. Van Tiff," said Haledjian, thinks it was an inside job. I very much agree."

WHOM DID HALEJDON SUSPECT? AND WHY?

was "faultless," the necklace on Van Tiff's desk. Had it really been the glass necklace onto the "Marble floor." Overplaying his part, the thief and without parting with the real necklace. Haledjian suspected Van Tiff of staging the theft for the insurance—a perfect imitation of the stolen one. The thieves didn't bother with it. That's why I'm convinced someone in my employ directed the business."

"Perhaps," said Inspector Winters. "Now I'd like to question your store manager, Mr. Milcross."

Milcross, a figety man, told his version of the holdup as he led Haledjian and the inspector from Van Tiff's office and across the ornate marble floor to a high,
