MORE SUBSIDIES FOR REA

A bill (H. R. 1400) has been introduced in Congress which would provide additional financing for rural electric cooperative activities through a proposed Federally funded Rural Electric Bank program. The bill would amend the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 and establish two banks to provide extra sources of financing for rural electric and telephone projects. The new financing is designed to supplement the present program of two percent REA loans to rural cooperatives which would be continued. The banks could make "intermediate" loans at four percent, which theoretically would cover the bank's costs. The banks could borrow money from the U. S. Treasury without Congressional approval or restraint if funds were not available to pay interest or principal on its debentures. This legislation, which could tap billions in taxpayer's funds to build additional generating plants and transmission lines, is either necessary nor fiscally sound. During last year's debate in the 89th Congress criticism centered on the electrification proposal and included charges that it would create new subsidies to support construction of generating and transmission lines, is neither necessary with private, investor-owned companies. The lending of funds or providing credit should not be a normal Federal function in the domestic economy and existing programs in this area ultimately should be terminated or shifted to private operations.

Dear Friends:

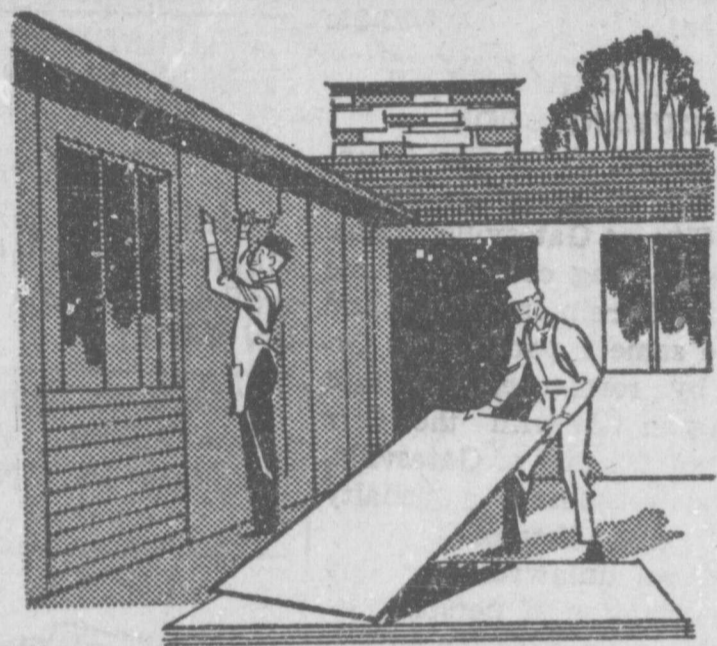

The best news we have had this week is that our district has had pretty general rains. I was in Texas last week and know just how desperate the situation was getting. We sincerely hope that the rains reached everyone.

Last Saturday I participated in the dedication of the new Post Office building at Salado. I was especially happy to be there as I think the people of this community have done a remarkably fine job of turning their natural scenic attractions into an economic advantage. I believe that we are overlooking many opportunities of this kind and that other communities in Central Texas could and should capitalize on their scenic resources.

For instance, we should push a real Scenic Parkway. We should preserve the mixed scenic and scientific area around Glen Rose. We should publicize the spots of local historic interest (like Fort Parker and Old Nashville) which exist in every county in the district. We should invite more tourists to the Chandor Gardens at Weatherford. In Waco we are going to build a town lake and we should revitalize Cameron Park with an overhead sprinkler system that would make it a place of year-round beauty.

We all recognize that our great lakes bring lots of people into the area but we seem to forget that there are also thousands of people who will visit an area just because it is pretty, because it is historic, or because it is interesting from a scientific standpoint.

A Vignette of Japan on Fifth Avenue

New York City was recently treated to a unique sight of a 14th century castle in celebration of "Japan Week" and the inauguration of Japan Air Line's around-the-world flights. The miniature Tsuruga-jo (Castle of the Auspicious Crane) was a gift to the city from the Japan Air Lines and was on view at the Pulitzer Foundation in front of the famed Plaza Hotel on Fifth Avenue at 59th Street. The Japan Week was held as an adjunct to the New York City - Tokyo "Sister-City Affiliation" under the people-to-people program to promote better understanding and mutual trade between the two largest urban centers of the world.

While I am doing everything I can to make the people of this nation understand that we are not presently dealing fairly with our farmers—that is, they are not receiving a fair share of the National income—I don't think that our farming areas should sit back and wait for a wider recognition of their problems. On the contrary, all of those who could do so should be taking advantage of the tremendous change in the spending habits of American citizens. Americans are spending a smaller and smaller part of their income on food and fiber and a larger part of it on recreation—much of that on outdoor recreation. We can and we should have in those expenditures. By making we will not only encourage more our communities more attractive tourists and money-spending visitors but we will have a better place in which to live ourselves. Let's make Central Texas so attractive that more of us will want to stay at home.

The Mod-Est Of Models

"This is Tracy, and in the fashion world, she's the model of the hour. Tracy gets $5000 for a television commercial, $3000 for a fashion layout, $700 an hour for fashion shows—and a $5 a week allowance." That's how host Ryan O'Neal will introduce Tracy Weed, mod-est of the new models, to the American public on the ABC "GO!!!" television special, April 23.

The youth color musical, sponsored by Pepsi-Cola Company and Frito-Lay, Inc., divisions of PepsiCo, Inc., will feature Tracy—known to fashion insiders as the American "Twiggy" after the skinny young English model who's made underweight popular in England and America. As the girl "Girl Watchers" watch, Tracy will model an assortment of mod clothes—from wildly striped multi-colored shifts to pants suits to paper fashions.

Tracy will be only one of the many features of this wildly zany show. For those fanciers of model cars—not models—there'll be a showing of the newest hopped-up jalopy—the kaleidoscopic car. And for sun and sand lovers, a "beachy" scene will present the newest, maddest sport of them all—dune bugging. There'll be lots more, too—songs by Herman's Hermits, comedy by Noel Harrison and Donna Douglas, advice from Dear Abby—all set to "GO!!!" on April 23.

POAGE URGES MAIN STREET CRUSADE

Louisville, Ky., April 16 — Congressman W. R. (Bob) Poage, Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, U. S. House of Representatives, advised bankers tonight to "invest in Rural America, for your own self-interest— and to halt and reverse, the crowding and packing of our people in city slums and ghettos."

"I urge the bankers of America to lead a Main Street USA crusade," he said. "America desperately needs this. And your investments in Main Street will return profits to you."

Poage addressed an Agricultural Credit Conference of the Kentucky Bankers Association. "Many of our cities," he said, "have become centers of revolt against law and order. Some areas are on the verge of anarchy, and dangerous pace. It is crime is escalating at an alarm-unsafe to walk the streets. This nation confronts a moral and spiritual crisis."

"This crisis will never be met by a coercive manipulation of our people from Washington. The Federal Government, spending billions on handouts, never can bribe the criminal and the mal-content into obedience of the law. Our Government actually encourages lawlessness by pampering the lawless."

"The time has come — for swift and unequivocal action — to let every person know he is accountable to his fellowman, that society rewards the worthy and there is certain punishment for every crime against another person or his property."

"And I think the time has come for the long run — to look questioningly at the crowding of our people into cities, and to direct our attention again to Main Street USA, and to our great expanses of rural areas, the original source from which flowed the fundamental values on which this great nation was founded."

Mr. Poage commended the Kentucky bankers for organizing the conference on agricultural credit.

"It is heartening and encouraging to me," he said, "that you bankers are aware of the importance of agriculture to the business you are in, to the general economic well-being of the nation. I am here today to stress that beyond these considerations in the prosperity of agriculture and the economic revival of our Main Street towns may lie the beginning of the recovery of our cities from the ills, the sickness, that besets them.

Mr. Poage observed that few people seem to realize the impact that conditions in agriculture have had upon cities in the last 15 to 20 years.

"During this time," he said, "the number of farms has decreased from 6 million to around 3 million. The farm population has diminished from 25 million in 1947 to less than 12 million today. The mechanization of agriculture and poor farm income, especially in the 1950s, was largely responsible."

"Millions of people have been forced from the land and crowded into cities. Many Main Street towns have deteriorated, some have become ghost towns, aggravating the migration from rural America. Many cities actually have worsened their problems by establishing 'relief' and handout programs that, while aiding many worthy people, drew into the package urban areas millions who had no hope or expectation of becoming self sustaining. Slums have been created where people can exist on handouts without working. Self-reliance to a large measure has been stifled. Idleness and agitation have bred and provoked such a wave of depravity and lawlessness as the Nation has never known before."

Poage told the bankers: "Something's got to be done"

"I'm thinking of rural America, Main Street America — not our impacted cities," he said, "as a place for people to live— to grow in spirit, to become self-reliant, to respect the law, and to be happy."

"Of course many things will be involved in curing the sickness of our cities and of our Nation. The revival and spread of the worship of God, of course, tops the list. Next I would place emphasis upon the integrity of family life, which seems to have waned in this country. Then we must instill in great numbers of our people, especially in the slums, the dignity and pride of self-reliance. We must make opportunity for self-reliance and ambition. Harshly, but unavoidable we must deny the benefits of our Society to those who can but will not work. We must provide certain punishment for those who scorn honest labor and turn to crime.

"Today I am urging upon you the thought that our total problem will be lighter if we place greater emphasis upon recitalizing Rural America."

"This means:

- "1. Good income for the people who produce our food and fiber.
- "2. The establishment of industry, according to the traditional free enterprise principal, in thousands of Main Street communities."

The Congressional farm leader reviewed the farm income situation. He emphasized that 11 consecutive years of farm prices at or above parity, from 1942 through 1952, under the old production and price stabilization program, enabled farmers through their own income to finance a mechanized and scientific agriculture that brought food abundance to this nation that has been shared by hungry people throughout the Free World. He pointed to the general deterioration of farm income during the middle and late 1950's when farm production and price support programs were relaxed. He noted the recovery of prices which began in 1961.

"But now," he said, "in this year 1967, we are on the edge of another farm depression. Farm prices in March and April were at 74 percent of parity. In only prices received by farmers for one other month since 1934 have what they produce been so low in relation to the prices they must pay for machinery, fertilizer and other materials they must have to make the crops, grow livestock and live on the farm. Farm prices have dripped by 8 percent since last August."

"On top of this the minimum wage law is being applied to agriculture for the first time in 1967."

"Low prices and higher labor costs no doubt will bring about greater mechanization in agriculture. I fear that many thousands more people will migrate from our farms to the cities."

He repeated: "Something must be done."

Poage urged bankers throughout the country to insist upon policies to assure fair income for agriculture.

"Obviously, this is to your own self interest. It is important to the general well-being of the economy of our country. It is especially vital to our cities."

Then he urged the bankers to give their attention especially to encourage and financing industry in Main Street towns.

He concluded:

"Good farm income and humming small industries in our towns and villages will hold people in Rural America. It will stop and reverse the flow of people into our impacted and slum-ridden cities. This nation today is face to face with a crisis, in the identification and selection of values that will shape the spiritual, social and economic order in all the years ahead. I am convinced that a revitalization of Rural America can be our best investment to meet this crisis. I am convinced that more voices should be raised from our countryside, from Main Street USA, in the councils of government in Washington."

"Nobody can be more important in all this than you bankers. The job ahead is not to be accomplished by superimposed programs from Washington. The Government can help by establishing policies, especially with respect to farm production and prices, that are essential. But the real job is in the states, in the towns and on the farms — in private enterprise."

"I've always thought that bankers and their leadership, could accomplish almost anything. There is a great challenge and great opportunities here for you. I pledge myself to work with you in every way in such undertakings."

Constant sun dries skin out. Leathers it. Burns it over and over again. And that can be dangerous.

If you are out in the sun a lot (or even if you're not), check into any sore that does not heal. Promptly. It could be a warning signal of cancer. And cancer is easier to cure when it's detected early.

Teacher Panic

by Helen Jenkins

It's Spring!

To different people this means various things but to a high school student it means trouble. Spring, despite all its beauty and all its promises of things to come, spells horror to all the already overloaded high school students. This horror comes in the form of the annual disease known as "teacher panic."

This "teacher panic" is actually a neurotic reaction caused by the sudden realization that there are only five weeks left in this school term. The teacher worries, "Have I taught them enough?" and the answer is invariably, "No." These teachers are irrevocably convinced that these poor little hunks of high school protoplasm are not well grounded enough in the ropes of life to be able to live without their guiding supervision for a whole summer. This is caused not only by the "innocent" look on GHS students faces, but also by the number of pages they haven't covered in their books. Once again these teachers worry, "Is there something in this section of the book I haven't covered that will help this student guide his own life." The answer is invariably "Yes," and the teacher panic is on.

For the remaining five weeks, these teachers not only cram multitudinous homework assignments down the throats of the already overworked high school students, but also spend class time feverishly reading, and reading, and reading, and reading.

No need to worry, though: Nine out of ten times these teachers will make it through the book all right. With a sigh of satisfaction they will be able to sit back and enjoy the summer knowing that they have done all they can for their students. But, really, all in

What To Do In a Tornado

- People in open country can view the approach of a tornado and move at right angles to its path. If there is no time to escape, lie flat in the nearest depression, such as a ditch or ravine.
- In towns or cities, seek shelter inside, preferably in a substantial building. Stay away from windows.
- The southwest corner of the basement of a frame house is safer than in a brick or stone house. If there is no basement, lie down on the first floor under a table or bed (preferably in the southwest corner).
- Urban schools: Stay inside, away from windows; remain near an inside wall on a lower floor. Avoid auditoriums and gymnasiums.
- Rural schools of frame construction: Teachers should remove children to a ravine or ditch if storm shelter is not available.

Everybody's "Duning" It

Everybody'll be "duning" it when the latest youth craze appears on the home screens April 23 on ABC. Dune buggies, the newest U.S. sports trend will be featured on the "GO!!!" TV special—complete with a dune buggy ballet especially choreographed for the dusty chariots.

Girls dressed in wild multi-striped shifts will caper over the sand mounds and stripped-down cars and jeeps will rev their motors and follow the dancers, as they leap and jump over the 45 degree dunes.

This fun-sport of dune buggy riding will be just one of the special features on the youth musical special sponsored by Pepsi-Cola Company and Frito-Lay, Inc., divisions of PepsiCo, Inc. Host Ryan O'Neal and guest stars Herman's Hermits, Noel Harrison and Donna Douglas will investigate new youth crazes like kaleidoscopically painted cars, "the world's first tandem cycle," surfing and a paper fashion show.

The many antics of guests plus the wild products shown will provide a youthful, frolicking show. And the "GO!!!" show is so fun-packed that viewers will gasp "What's happening next" with anticipation.

FISHING DAM BACKWATERS

BY TOM ANDREWS

I can recall lures unlike anything today's young angler has ever seen. Some looked like torpedoes, and even had propellers. Others were heavy enough to clobber smaller fish.

These primitive monsters are gone, but some anglers still figure that the screwier the lure, the more fish it will attract. Seems to me, the more a lure looks like a shiner, or chub, the better my chances of taking fish that feed on them.

This observation held true, in one memorable instance, even for a good lure that didn't get a chance to show itself to best advantage in a normal cast-and-retrieve situation.

Three of us were fishing dam backwaters in Michigan's Upper Peninsula. It was late June of a summer that hadn't yet arrived. We got just enough action in the first three days, however, to make us hang on for a fourth.

We woke to a drizzle that stopped as we reached Peavey Backwater. I soloed in a skiff and worked the shore; my companions trolled in a 14-footer. I came on a tiny bay blocked by a tree trunk thick with limbs. Casting and retrieving were nearly impossible. So, naturally, I just had to try!

I needed casting accuracy, plus a lure that gave good action while swimming in a straight line. The gold Sprite I chose was one I knew could do the job.

Like all of Johnson's spoon-type lures, the Sprite is forged. That extra weight, combined with the lure's special teardrop shape, gives controlled, bullet-like casts. And the tapered edges created by forging cause the lure to swim in a straight line, but with a flashing, exciting wobble.

My first cast was nearly perfect. The lure, however, brushed a branch. So I wound up with the Sprite dangling in the water, and the mono draped over the branch.

I grabbed limbs with my free hand, pulling myself closer to the trunk. Then BAM! — a smashing strike nearly pulled the rod from my hand. By tugging at the limbs, I had set the Sprite to jigging. Now I had a 13-pound northern digging deep into the little bay, and lifting me right off my seat.

Before the battle was over, I had a foot on the trunk and the other in my skittish skiff. But I finally got most of the giant into the net hanging from my belt. My buddies, bless 'em, stopped laughing and helped me back into the skiff.

If there's a moral, I guess it's that a first-class lure can make you look good no matter how poorly you fish it!
