

DECISION OF BOARD IS MADE PUBLIC

KANSAS CITY HAS AN ATTRACTION FOR LEGION MEMBERS

HUNDREDS HAVE ALREADY ARRIVED FOR ANNUAL CONVENTION. FOREIGN NOTABLES ARE ENROUTE TO MEETING.

Preparations Have Been Systematized With Military Precision.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 28.—"Kansas City or bust" became the slogan of the American legion today as its members moved upon the city for their annual convention which begins Monday.

From east, west, north and south, by rail, by air, by motor and foot, came the legionnaires. All drawn to one central point by the bond of comradeship.

Dawn found hundreds in the city with each hour adding materially to the number of arrivals.

Meanwhile, speeding westward were the foreign notables, headed by Marshal Foch, who are coming to renew ties made and fostered during the world war.

Lieutenant General Baron Jacques of Birmans, and the late Armando Diaz of Italy will be the first to arrive. They are due Sunday morning. Monday afternoon Admiral Earl Beatty of Great Britain is scheduled to arrive and late the same day will come Marshal Foch, accompanied by General Pershing.

Preparations for the convention have been systematized with military precision. Special attention is being given to the parade on Tuesday, which officials said would be the most magnificent in the city's history.

Elaborate arrangements for policing the city during the convention have been made and it was announced today a force of legionnaires as large as the city's police force will be on duty. The men will operate as military police and their activities will be confined to the legionnaires.

Delegations from Minnesota, New Mexico and the state of Washington will be among the arrivals early today. Large badges were worn by the Minnesota delegation. The state of the new Mexicans readily distinguishable, while the delegates from Washington wore blue and white sashes.

Clear, cool weather for legion convention. KANSAS CITY, Oct. 28.—There will be clear, cool weather here during the three days of the American legion convention next week.

FINAL DEMAND IS PRESENTED TO THE IRISH CONFERENCE

ACCEPTANCE BY GREAT BRITAIN IS THOUGHT TO BE IMPOSSIBLE. VIEWS OF NEWSPAPERS ARE NOT ENCOURAGING.

Much Anxiety Over Debate To Feature Session of Commons Monday.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Final demands have been presented by the Irish conference today to the British government.

The issue has been referred to Dublin, according to the report, and it was implied that the daily stream answer, which is expected by Monday at the latest, will probably be unfavorable.

Views expressed by newspapers here today certainly were not encouraging. There appeared to be an agreement by political correspondents that the British government's sovereignty over Ireland, was the crux of the situation.

"In quarters that should accurately reflect the mind of the government, gloomy forebodings were current yesterday."

One spoke of pessimism in ministerial quarters and that attitude seemed to be shared by most political writers. It was not surprising under these circumstances that the British government would receive support from the majority of its representatives again meet the Irish delegates.

Winds followed by cloudy skies and chilled air. The northern which sprung into the district morning accompanied by drizzling rains and lower temperatures, was followed Saturday morning by a cloudy sky and a chilled air.

FINANCIAL MATTERS NOT A PART OF THE ARMS CONFERENCE

SUCH IS OPINION HELD BY THE LEADERS IN WASHINGTON. ONLY TWO QUESTIONS ARE ON THE PROGRAM.

One Has to Do With Armament, The Other With Far East Problems.

National Political Correspondent of the New York Evening Post and the Wichita Daily Times. Copyright, 1921, by the New York Evening Post.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 28.—Decidedly the best judgment is that the continually recurring talk about "financial" matters at the arms conference is not a part of the program.

The "financial" matters at the arms conference are not a part of the program. The only two questions on the program are armament and the far east.

DISPUTES MUST BE REFERRED AND STRIKE FORFEITS RIGHT OF UNIONS TO BENEFITS OF LAW

CHICAGO, October 28.—The United States labor board today in effect forbade railroad union labor from striking without the board's permission, and declared that all strikers who violated the order would be deemed as deserters who had voluntarily removed themselves from the protection of the transportation act.

CHICAGO, October 28.—The United States labor board today issued its decision in the hearing held Wednesday to determine responsibility for the general strike threatened by the four brotherhoods and the switchmen's union, who had voluntarily removed themselves from the protection of the transportation act.

The board made three findings: First: That all such disputes must be referred to the board before any action is taken.

Second: That any interruption of traffic would be a blow aimed at the peace, prosperity and safety of the entire nation.

Third: That any going out on strike without its right and the rights of its members in all existing contracts and lose all benefits accorded by the transportation act.

SHERIFF'S POSSE IS SEARCHING FOR TRAIN WRECKERS

FIRST SECTION OF GRAND TRUNK PASSENGER IS DERAILED. THREE MEN WERE SEEN RUNNING INTO WOODS.

Three People Were Injured When Train Plunged into Ditch. LAPEER, MICH., Oct. 28.—A sheriff's posse and railroad detectives were searching for three men who fled from the scene late last night of the derailment of the first section of Grand Trunk passenger train No. 4. The men were believed by the authorities to be train wreckers who removed a rail near Elba, three miles from here, with the result that the entire train, except one Pullman car, plunged into the ditch. Three persons were injured seriously.

A flagman saw the trio running into the woods from the scene of the wreck as he went to reset the place warning signals. One of the men, he reported, was well past middle age, while his companions were much younger. This directed suspicion toward a man about 55 years of age who had been in Elba three days and who was seen last night in company with two young men. The three, it was said, had carefully avoided contact with the police.

The train had been deliberately wrecked was established, officials said, by the finding of track workers' tools at the scene of the derailment. Railroad men identified the tools as having been stolen from the Elba section house two weeks ago.

The engineer observed from a distance that a rail had been removed and was able to slacken the speed of the train before it reached the spot. The engine turned over three times as it hurtled into the ditch, and the train was completely wrecked. The injured, two passengers and the fireman, were brought here for treatment. The fireman, severely scalded, probably could not recover, physicians said.

FROM NOW ON ~ By Frank L. Packard

THE STORY
Dave Henderson steals $100,000 which Martin Tydemus gives him for Bookie Skarvan to recoup racing losses. He hides the money and serves five years in prison, stubbornly keeping his mouth shut, both to the police and the old gang who are after the loot. Only because he knows his every move will be watched when he gets out does he finally disclose the hiding place of the money to Millman, a prison mate. And he is really surprised when Millman plans an appointment in New York, and turns over to him the unopened package of bank notes. Then Millman surprises him still more by demanding, as his share of the deal, either the entire amount to return to the estate of Tydemus, who has died, or some of it—saying that he feels himself guilty with Henderson and will pay it back out of his own private fortune if Henderson decides to keep it. Henderson angrily tells Millman to say it back if he must, but means to keep the money for which he has schemed so long and craftily. He goes to find one Dago George, to whom he has a letter from Nicola Capriano, an old San Francisco bank gang leader. This letter contains a secret code which is intended to double-cross Henderson when he gets his money in New York, and when said Capriano's daughter, Teresa, finds this out she remonstrates, arousing her father to a fit of anger, which causes his sudden death. Teresa follows Henderson to New York, and he has been dragged to sleep in Dago George's hotel, and sets about to outwit her father's friend, Menzies, who has been mind is on the trail of the $100,000. Bookie Skarvan, believing Henderson dead, has followed Teresa to New York, guessing that her trail will lead him to the loot, and enters the aid of Cunny Smeeks, alias the Scorpion, another gangster.

With a bound he reached the dress-suit case, and flung up the lid. The money was gone

THE Scorpion took Skarvan to a private room, pointed to a couch, and possessed himself of a tabouret, which he strolled. "Sit down," he invited. "Have a drink?"

"No," said Bookie Skarvan. "Thanks just the same. I guess I won't take anything tonight." He grinned significantly. "I'm likely to be busy."

The Scorpion nodded.

"Sure—all right!" he agreed. "Well, we'll get to cases, then. Baldy Vickers writes that you and him are in on a deal, and that you may want a card or two slipped to fill your hand. What's the lay, and what can I do for you?"

"It's a bit of a long story," Bookie Skarvan removed the cigar butt from his lips, eyed it contemptuously for a moment, finally flung it away, fished another cigar from his pocket, and, without lighting it, settled it firmly between his back teeth. "I got to be fair with you," he said. "Baldy said he handed it to you straight in the letter, but I got to make sure you understand. We think we got a good thing, and, if it is, anything you do ain't going for nothing; but there's always the chance that it's a bubble, and that there's a hole gets kicked in it."

"That's all right!" said Cunny Smeeks, alias the Scorpion, easily. "If there's anything coming I'll get mine—and I'm satisfied with any division that Baldy puts across. Baldy and me know each other pretty well. You can forget all that end of it—Baldy's the whitest boy I ever met, and what Baldy says goes with me all the way. Go ahead with the story—spill it!"

"The details don't count with you," said Bookie Skarvan glowily; "and there's no use gumming up the time with them. The bet is that a nice, sweet, little Italian girl, that's just piked foster'n hell across the continent, knows where there's $100,000 in cold cash, that was placed and hidden five years ago by a fellow named Dave Henderson—see? Dave served his space, and got out a few days ago—and croaked—got blown up with a Dago bomb—get me? He didn't have no time to enjoy his wealth—kind of tough, eh? Well, he stood in with this Italian girl's father, an old crook named Nicola Capriano, and he went there the night he got out of prison."

"The way we got it doped out is that the old Italian, after getting next to where the money was, bumped off Dave Henderson, himself—see? Then Nicola dies of heart disease, and the girl hardly waits to bury the old man decently, and beats it for here—me trailing her on the same train. Well, I guess that's all—you can figure for yourself why we're interested in the girl."

"I get you!" said the Scorpion, with a sinister grin. "It don't look very hard bucking up against a lone female, and I guess you can telegraph Baldy that he don't need to worry. What do you want—a bunch to pinch the girl, or a box-worker to crack a safe? You can have anything that's on tap—and I guess that ain't passing up many bets."

Bookie Skarvan shook his head.

"I don't want either—not yet," he said. "The girl ain't got the money yet, and there ain't nothing to do just watch her and keep her getting scared until she either grabs it, or lets out where it is." He leaned forward toward the Scorpion. "D'ye know a place, not far from here, that's called the Iron Tavern?" he demanded abruptly.

The Scorpion shrugged his shoulders.

"Everybody knows it!" he said caustically. "It's a dump! It's the rendezvous of the worst outfit of black-handers in America; and the guy that runs it, a fellow named Dago George, runs the gang, too—and he's the guy. But what's that got to do with it?"

"The girl's there," said Bookie Skarvan, tersely.

"Oh, she is, eh?" There was a new and sudden interest in the Scorpion's voice.

"She went there from the train with her grips," Bookie Skarvan's cigar grew red in his mouth. "Well, me, too, I'm for the same joint, only I don't want to take any chance of spilling the beans."

"You mean you're afraid she'll pipe you off?"

"No," said Bookie Skarvan. "No, I ain't afraid of that. She never got a peep at me on the train, and she only saw me once before in her life, and that time, besides it being dark and me being outside on the front doorstep, she was so scared I might have been a lamppost, for all she'd know me again. It was the night her old man croaked—see? No, I ain't afraid of her—but I couldn't afford to take any chances by blowing in there right after her. I wasn't afraid of her, but I had my fingers crossed on whether she'd be in the place, and I guess, after what you said, that my bunch was right. It was her place for her to go right off the minute she landed in New York, and she didn't go there instead of a decent hotel just by luck—get me? I figured she might stand in there pretty thick—and if she did, and I blew in right on top of her, the betting odds were about a million dollars to a peanut that I'd be a sucker. I'm sure of it now that you say the fellow who runs it is a Dago in the same old line of business that her father was in. What?"

The Scorpion's pale blue eyes scrutinized Bookie Skarvan's face—and lighted with a curious benignity.

"You and Baldy make a pretty good combination, I guess!" he observed with dry admiration.

Bookie Skarvan indulged in his wheezy chuckle.

"We've had a little luck together once in a while," he admitted modestly. "Well, you get me, don't you? I've got to get into that Iron Tavern joint just the same. That's the first card we play. I figured that maybe this Dago George would know you by reputation anyhow, and that you could fix it for me without it looking as though it were anything more than a friend of yours, say, who'd got into a little temporary difficulty with the police down in Baltimore, say, and was keeping quiet and retired for a few days till the worst of it blew over—and that you'd picked out his joint as the best bet for me."

The Scorpion got up from his seat abruptly.

"Say," he said, cordially, "I'm glad I met you! That listens good! Sure! I guess I can fix that! Dago George and me ain't pals, and we don't love each other any more than you'd notice; but he knows where I'm through, maybe quite a fat little bill—but he can always send it to Baldy—I'm not here! What? It's beginning to look good again. Five years I've been trying to get the grappling hook on that coin. It looks pretty good now, and I guess I can see it coming—and I guess I won't have to wait as long as Baldy will!" He wagged his head pleasantly. "I never was fond of San Francisco—and I always wanted to travel! Perhaps Baldy and Mr. Cunny Smeeks won't be such good friends by-and-by. I dunno! I only know that Bookie Skarvan won't be sticking around to see them go into mourning for their share of that hundred thousand that they think they're going to get—no so you'd observe it!"

Bookie Skarvan's eyes swept the den indifferently and without interest. They fastened finally on the toe of his own boot. The minutes passed, and as they passed a scowl came gradually to Bookie Skarvan's face, and a fat hand in a sudden nervous gesture went to his forehead and brushed across his eyes. His thoughts seemed to have veered into a less pleasant channel.

"Yes," he muttered, "you can take it from me that I ain't sorry Dave Henderson's dead—not very! He never saw all my cards, and that's the one hold Baldy had on me." The room was apparently over-heated—for a fat man. A bead of sweat came out on Bookie Skarvan's forehead. He swore savagely. "You damn fool, can't you forget it! You're not afraid of a dead man now, are you!"

The Scorpion came back.

"Come on!" he said, from the doorway. "It's fixed! He put up a howl and wouldn't stand for it at first and he kicked so hard that I guess he's in with the girl all right. He said he had no place to put anybody; but he came across all right—with a twist of the screws. You're a friend of mine and your Baltimore spiel goes—see? The pale blue eyes darkened suddenly. "You get what I've done, don't you? Dago George went I've done easily, and if this thing busts open and Dago George tumbles to what I've handed him I'm mope going to have a little gang war on my hands."

"I get you!" said Bookie Skarvan earnestly, as he joined the other in the doorway.

across the hall! I guess I won't go to bed just yet, not just yet—but I guess I'll put out the light."

IT WAS pitch black. Dave Henderson opened his eyes drowsily. He lay for a moment puzzled and bewildered as to where he was. And then consciousness returned in fuller measure, and he remembered that he had thrown himself down on the bed fully dressed—and must have fallen asleep.

He stirred now uneasily. He was most uncomfortable. Something brutally hard and unyielding seemed to be prodding and boring into his side. He felt down under him with his hand—and smiled quizzically. It was his revolver. He would probably, otherwise, have slept straight through the night. The revolver, as he had turned over in his sleep, undoubtedly had twisted in his pocket, and had resolved itself into a sort of skewer, muzzle end up, then dug ungraciously and painfully into his ribs.

He straightened the revolver in his pocket—and the touch of the weapon seemed to clear his faculties and fling him with a sudden jolt from the borderland of sleep, mental indolence into a whirl of mental activity. He remembered Millman. Millman and the revolver were indissolubly associated. Only Millman had returned the money. That was the strangest part of it. Millman had returned the money. It was over there now on the floor in the dress-suit case. He remembered that he had deliberately flung his passion into a white heat. He should therefore be in an unbridled rage with Millman now—only he wasn't. Nor would that anger seemingly return—even at his bidding. Instead, there seemed to be a cold, deliberate, reasoned self-condemnation creeping upon him. It was not pleasant. He tried to fight it off. It persisted. He was conscious of a slight in the only way he could—and still keep faith with himself. Did he throw you down—Dave?"

For a moment Dave Henderson did not stir; he seemed mentally and physically in a strange and singular state of suspended animation. And then a queer and twisted smile flickered across his lips.

"Yes, he's white!" he muttered. "By God, the whitest man on earth—that's Millman! Only—damn him! Damn him, for the hole he's put me in!"

—Yes, that was it! He had it at last, and exactly now! Over there on the floor in the dress-suit case was the money; but it wasn't the money that he, Dave Henderson, had taken a gambler's risk and a sporting chance to get; it wasn't the money he had fought like a wildcat for—it was Millman's money. It wasn't the money he had staked his all to win—he staked nothing here. It was another man's stake. Over there was the money and he was free to use it—if he chose to take it as the price of another man's loyalty, the price that another man paid for having taken upon himself the risk of prison bars and stone walls again because that other man believed his risk was substituted for the certainty that Dave Henderson would otherwise incur that fate!

The inner voice came quietly again—but it held a bitter bite.

"What is the matter? Are you in doubt about anything? Why don't you get up, and undress, and go to bed, and sleep quietly for all your life, and nothing to worry you—Millman pays the bills."

"Five years!" Dave Henderson muttered. "Five years of hell—for nothing!"

His lips hardened. That was Nicola Capriano lying over there on his bed, wasn't it?—and plucking with thin, blue-tipped fingers at the coverlet—and eying him with those black eyes that glittered virulently—and twisting bloodless lips into a sardonic and contemptuous sneer. And why was that barbed tongue of Nicola Capriano pouring out such a furious and vicious flood of vituperation?

ANOTHER vision came—an oval face of great beauty, but whose expression was inscrutable; whose dark eyes met his in a long and steady gaze; and from a full, white, ivory throat, mounting upward until it touched the wealth of hair that crowned the forehead, a tinge of color brought a more radiant life. What would Teresa say?

His hands swept again and again, nervously, fiercely, across his eyes. In the years of his haunted boast that neither hell nor the devil would hold him back, he had not dreamed of this. A thief! Yes, he had been a thief—but he had never been a piker! He wasn't a culture, was he, to feed and gorge on a friend's loyalty!

He smiled suddenly. Honesty! What was honesty? Millman was trying to hold himself up as an example to be followed—eh? Well, that was Millman's privilege, wasn't it? And, after all, how honest was Millman? Was there anybody who was intrinsically honest? If there were, it might be honest, but Millman could afford that hundred thousand, Millman had said so himself; it didn't mean anything to Millman. If, for instance, it took the last penny Millman had to make good that money there might be something in honesty to talk about—but that sort of honesty didn't exist, either in Millman, or in any other human being. He, Dave Henderson, had yet to see any one who would sacrifice all and everything in an absolutely literal way upon the altar of honesty as a principle. Every one had his price. His, Dave Henderson's, price had been one hundred thousand dollars; he, Dave Henderson, wouldn't steal, say a hundred dollars—and a hundred dollars was probably an even greater matter to him than a hundred thousand was to Millman, and—

He bunched his mental soliloquy roughly to an end, with a low, half angry, half perturbed exclamation. What had brought him to weigh the pros and cons of honesty, anyway? He had never been disturbed on that score in these five years behind prison bars! Why now? It wasn't that that concerned him; that held him now in the throes of a bitter mental conflict, that dismayed him, that tormented him, that mocked at the hell of torture he would—if he yielded—have endured in vain, that grinned at him out of the darkness sardonically, and awaited with biting irony his decision. It didn't matter what degree of honesty Millman possessed; it was Millman's act, in its most material and tangible sense, that threatened now to crush him.

Both hands, like gnarled knobs, bent above his head. He was a thief; but, by God, he was a man! If he kept that money there, he became a piling, whining beggar, sneaking and crawling his way through life on—charity! Charity! Oh, yes, he might find a softer name for it; but, by any name, he would none the less feed to the day he died, like a parasite and a damned puny, pitiful whelp and cur, on another man's—charity!

"Give it back—no!" he whispered fiercely through set lips. "I've paid too much—my mine—I've paid for it with the sweat of hell! It's mine! I will not give it back!"

"Are you sure?" whispered that inner voice. "It begins to look as though there were something in life, say, an honest pride, that was worth more than money—even to you, Dave."

He sprang restively from the bed to the floor, and groped his way across the room to the light. He was in for a night of it—subconsciously he realized that, subconsciously he realized that he would not sleep, but subconsciously he was prompted to get his clothes off and obtain, lacking mental ease, what physical comfort he could.

He turned on the light, and the act diverted his thoughts momentarily. He did not seem to remember that he had ever turned off that light—but rather, in fact, that the light had been on when Dago George had flung himself down on the bed. It was rather strange! His eyes stared at the room curiously, narrowed suddenly as they fell upon the dress-suit case, and upon one of the catches that appeared to have become unfastened—and with a bound he reached the dress-suit case, and flung up the lid.

The money was gone.

Motionless, save that his lips twitched queerly, Dave Henderson stood erect, and stared down into the pillaged dress-case. And then his hands clenched slowly—tightened—and grew white across the knuckles.

The money was gone! The agony of these days and nights, when, wounded, he had fled from the police, the five years of prison torment which he had endured, seemed to pass with lightning swiftness in review before him—and to mock him, and to become a ghastly travesty. The money was gone!

The pillaged dress-suit case seemed to leer and mock at him, too. He might have saved himself that little debate, which he had not settled, and which was based upon a certain element of ethics that involved the suggestion of charity. It was settled for him now. He owed Millman now one hundred thousand dollars, only the choice as to whether he would pay it or not was no longer his, and—

Damn it! The money was gone! Could he not grasp that one, single, concrete, vital fact, and set upon it, without standing here, with his brain, like some hapless yoked nag, and mauling? Where? When? How? He could only have been asleep for a short time, surely. He wrenched his watch suddenly from his pocket. Three o'clock! It was three o'clock in the morning!

Five hours! He had been asleep five hours, then! He must have slept very soundly that any one could have entered the room without arousing him!

His lips hardened. He was alert enough now, both mentally and physically. He stepped over to the door. It was still locked. His eyes swept around the room. The window, then! What about the window?

He felt suddenly for his money belt beneath his underclothing, as he started across the room. The belt was there. Thank, at least, was safe. A twisted smile came to his lips. Naturally! His brain was exhibiting some glimmer of sense and cohesion now! It was evident enough that no one, since no one knew anything about it, had been specifically after that package of bank notes. It could only have been the work of a sneak thief—who had probably stumbled upon the greatest stroke of luck in his whole abandoned career. It was undoubtedly a quarter of the city wherein sneak thieves were bred! The man would obviously not have been fool enough, with a fortune already in his possession, to have risked the frisking of his, Dave Henderson's, sleeping person! Was the man, then, an inmate of the Iron Tavern, say, that greasy waiter, for instance; or had he gained entrance from outside; or, since the theft might have taken place hours ago, was it a predatory hanger-on at the bar who had sneaked his way upstairs, and—

The window, too, was locked! It was queer! Both windows and door locked! How had the man got in—and got out again? Mechanically, he unlocked and raised the window—and with a quick jerk of his body forward leaned out excitedly. Was this the answer—this platform of a fire escape that ran between his window and the next? But his window had been locked!

He stood there hesitant. Should he arouse Dago George? He could depend upon and trust Dago George, thanks to Nicola Capriano; but to go to Dago George meant that confidences would be laid up to which he desired to give to no man. His brain seemed suddenly to become frantic. The money was gone—his, or Millman's, or the devil's, it didn't matter which now—the money was gone, swallowed up in the black of that night out there, without a clue that offered him a suggestion even on which to act. But he couldn't stand here inactive like a fool, could he? Nor—his brain jered at him now—could he go out and prowl around the city streets, and ask each passerby if he or she had seen a package of bank notes whose sum was one hundred thousand dollars? What else was there, then, to do, except to arouse Dago George? Dago George, from what Nicola Capriano had said, would have many strings to pull—underground strings. That was it—underground strings! It wasn't a police job!

He turned from the window, took a step back across the room, and halted again abruptly. What was that? It came again—a faint, low rustling sound, and it seemed to come from the direction of the fire escape.

In an instant he was back at the window, but this time he crouched down at the sill. A second passed while he listened, and from the edge of the mesh strained his eyes out into the darkness, and then his hand crept into his side pocket and came out with his revolver. Some one, a dark form, blacker than the night shadows out there, was snawling from the next window to the fire escape.

Dave Henderson's lips thinned. Just a second more until that "some one" was half-way out and half-way in, and at a disadvantage—and now!

With a spring, lithe and quick as a cat, Dave Henderson was through the window, and the dark form was wriggling and squirming in his grasp, and a low cry came—and Dave Henderson swore sharply under his breath.

It was a woman! A woman! Well, that didn't matter! One hundred thousand dollars was gone from his dress-suit case, and this woman was crawling to the fire escape from the next room at 3 o'clock in the morning—that was what mattered!

They were on the iron platform now, and he pushed her none too gently along it toward the window of his own room—into the light. And then his hands dropped from her as though suddenly bereft of power, and as suddenly lifted again, and almost fierce in their intensity, gripped her shoulders, and forced her face more fully into the light.

"Teresa!" he whispered hoarsely. "You—Teresa!"

GENIUS

By RICHARD LLOYD JONES

Though it is a common practice to covet genius or gold, just waiting will bring neither. It is foolish to assume that you possess a measure of genius and that all you have to do is wait for inspiration.

Inspiration goes hunting for no one. If you want it you yourself must go and get it.

Genius is always impatient. It is restless, eager. Latent genius is but a presumption. Inaction produces nothing. Though patience may be employed, genius is always a matter of energy, expression in action, just as an oak that flourishes for a thousand years springs not into full life like a reed, so does many a genius develop slowly, laboriously, but surely.

The men of greatest genius have invariably been amongst the most plodding, hard working, and intent men. Their chief contrast with other men has been their capacity to labor harder and more effectively.

To do, through labor, that which seems to be impossible to labor is a mark of genius.

Genius is not haughty. It does not look with disdain upon the "vulgar masses." On the contrary it is lonely without the surrounding presence of a people to inspire it.

Genius is life intensified. It makes a nature many sided, whole, while most men remain partial or fragmentary.

There are no astonishing ways of doing astonishing things. All things are done with everyday tools we have about us. Through perseverance and devotion to a purpose comes that refinement of our faculties which we call genius.

Men of genius are not possessed of unnatural gifts. Their own cultivated fineness renders them more alive than the ordinary men to the supernatural. Yet the greatest geniuses have attributed their crowning achievements to God as if conscious of being possessed of a spark of His divinity.

This but emphasizes the false egotism of those who pose as possessors of genius and have it not.

Eccentricity is not a sign of genius. Genius is natural, always plain. Only the pretender affects the pose. He must; it is all he has. Genius does not. It reveals itself by doing things better.

Genius is as rich as it is generous, as noble as its ideal. If it hoards it impoverishes itself. If it seeks to better the world it lifts itself into a glory that money cannot buy.

The monuments to genius endure as the service of genius is generous.

As a great city is to a state so does genius stand out above the plane of men as a tower of concentrated power. For genius is labor plus patience, plus perseverance, plus power and plus an ideal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1921.

WE OUGHT TO INFORM OURSELVES FIRST.

A few days ago this paper said that whether the coming disarmament conference brought any other tangible result or not it would be worth while because it would give information to the American people.

Our is a government of the people. Our leaders cannot take the people where they are not prepared to go. Nothing can be done in this country unless it is backed by public opinion.

Already a number of informative articles are appearing in the newspapers and magazines. Among them is "Inside and Outside the Open Door," by William Howard Gardner appearing in the November issue of World's Work.

This is a new thought and it appears reasonable. It is another argument that convinces us that the problems before the conference are not as simple and easy as at first thought they appeared.

While praying for a peaceful solution of these problems let's go slow in drawing our conclusions and inform ourselves before we try to tell our delegates just what we want them to do.

Steady men are kept that way by bank balances. Somehow there isn't much excuse for a man at a matinee.

A cat scratches when rubbed the wrong way and so do heaves. Some go to the movies to rest their feet; others to practice reading aloud.

Adding up all reports of price reductions, we find we are being paid to take things.

CHARGE CONSPIRACY BETWEEN OPERATOR AND COAL MINERS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Oct. 29.—Affidavits designed to establish the existence of an unlawful conspiracy between union coal miners and operators were introduced today in the federal court hearing on an application for a temporary injunction restricting the United Mine Workers of America in its efforts to organize the West Virginia coal field centering around Mingo county.

The Borderland Coal corporation in seeking the injunction on behalf of three score West Virginia operators also asked that an order, if granted, set aside any agreement between the union and operators in organized fields throughout the country.

AUTOMOBILE SMASH UP REVOLVES INTO TRIANGULAR SUIT

A triangular suit in the county court at law is the outgrowth of an automobile smashup which occurred early this summer. The matter came up before Judge Guy Rogers Saturday morning and it was postponed in order to give parties time to prepare written briefs on the question involved.

E. M. Jarrett brought suit against J. L. Gohar for $100 for damages to his automobile when it is alleged the latter bumped into him. The defendant filed an answer in which he contends that he holds an insurance policy from the Southern Casualty Co. which insures his car against such accidents and which further specifies that the insurance company is to bear the expense of a law suit.

Electra Squad in Final Workout in Preparation For Contest With Bowie

WILL DIRECT ATTACK OF RED AND BLACK TODAY

By H. A. STROUD. ELECTRA, TEXAS, Oct. 29.—Final training of Electra High was completed yesterday with a light touch-up workout and final perfection of signals made for the bowie game which will be played here this afternoon.

The line is fast moving under the personal direction of Edens. He has tried them in formation and coached them off tackle and guard, teaching them how to get their man or men. Kelly, the 210-pound center, is showing marked improvement in practice.

Bowie and Electra have both played Wichita Falls this season and a comparison of the showing of the two elevens is interesting.

TEXAS A. AND M. DEFEATS OKLAHOMA AGGIES 23-7

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS, Oct. 29.—The Texas Aggies surprised the Oklahoma Aggies and gridiron followers here Friday, 23 to 7, in the first three minutes of play by a forward pass, Weaver to Hassbrook.

The summary—Score by periods: Texas A. & M., 7; Okla. A. & M., 0. Scoring: Texas A. & M.—Touchdown, Wilson, Pincus and Sanders; goal from placement, Morris; goal from touchdown, Morris 2.

CUTICURA HEALS ITCHY ERUPTIONS. On Scalp, Burned Badly, Hair Came Out. "Small, sore eruptions broke out on my scalp and itched and burned so badly that I scratched them, causing them to run together and make larger eruptions. My hair was dead and brittle and came out in clumps. A friend recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment so I sent for a free sample. It helped so much that I purchased more, and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment I was a completely healed." (Signed) Miss Lola E. You remember the story of the Pitcher— It made a good many trips to the well and it came back in good order. "I can take care of myself," it said—"they don't need to talk about risks to me." But it went once too often. After that it was only part of a pitcher, and they didn't need to talk to it about risks—it knew. A lot of people won't believe coffee can harm them until it does harm them. "Nonsense!" they say, "it never disturbs me." When it does disturb them, then they know. Often the disturbance which they then recognize is the result of irritations to nerves and digestion which have been going on for a long time. If you have to lie awake at night and count the clock ticks, after an evening cup of coffee, then you know that it's better to be safe than sorry. The risk of coffee's harm is gone when the meal-time drink is Postum. Here's a delightful and satisfying table beverage, with charm for the taste and without harm for nerves or digestion. You know you're on the right road with Postum; there's never the possibility that you'll go once too often. Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in the tin) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes. "There's a Reason" for Postum. Made by Postum Cereal Company, Inc., Battle Creek, Mich.

CUTICURA HEALS ITCHY ERUPTIONS. On Scalp, Burned Badly, Hair Came Out. "Small, sore eruptions broke out on my scalp and itched and burned so badly that I scratched them, causing them to run together and make larger eruptions. My hair was dead and brittle and came out in clumps. A friend recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment so I sent for a free sample. It helped so much that I purchased more, and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment I was a completely healed." (Signed) Miss Lola E. Womack, 1633 Arthur Ave., Nashville, Tenn. Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Talcum are all you need for all toilet uses. Bathe with Soap, soothe with Ointment, dust with Talcum. Sample Each Free! Mail Address: "Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. E, Malden 15, Mass." Sold everywhere. A friend recommended Cuticura Soap. Cuticura Soap shaves without soap.
