CONTINUING SERIES OF CONFERENCES IS HARDING PROPOSAL

PLAN GENERALLY APPROVED BY THE FOREIGN DELEGATES.

FURTHER NEGOTIATIONS WILL BE NECESSARY

Importance of Move Emphasized By Developments at Washington.

By Associated Press. WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—With the arms conference negotiations proceeding in an atmosphere of friendliness, the delegates generally believe progress and accomplishment, increasing importance attached to its outcome today as a result of the informal expressions of President Harding that the conference might lay the foundation for a continuing series of conferences with the aim of perpetuating a closer international accord.

The president's plan which has been offered only to persons of friendship, who delegates generally believe insure progress and accomplishment, increasing importance attached to its outcome today as a result of the informal expressions of President Harding that the conference might lay the foundation for a continuing series of conferences with the aim of perpetuating a closer international accord.

AUGUSTA, GA., Nov. 26.—Nearly one-half of the 700 block of Broad street and the entire eastern portion of the 200 block of Jackson street, both in the heart of Augusta's business section, were destroyed by fire early today with a total loss of about $2,000,000.

The fire started about 2:00 o'clock in the first story Johnson building at the corner of Jackson and Broad streets and was not brought under control until daylight.

The following buildings were in the path of the flames: Johnson building, total loss $1,000,000; Harrison building, total loss $1,000,000; Albion hotel, total loss $1,000,000; Genesis hotel, partly burned.

The Augusta Chronicle, the offices and plant of which were in the Harrison building, were a complete loss. Six other business establishments, including their gear, were destroyed. While the main fire was raging another broke out on Jackson street, sweeping three buildings.

The origin of the principal fire had not been determined early today.

FOUR ARMED MEN ESCAPE WITH GEMS VALUED AT $50,000

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 26.—Four armed men entered the offices of the St. Louis Refining company, in the business district, shortly after 10 o'clock today and made off with diamonds and jewelry said to be valued at $50,000.

The company assays jewelry not only to the satisfaction of its customers but also to the satisfaction of the St. Louis police.

The bandits escaped in an automobile with a New York registration number. One of the men was shot by the bank messenger. A score of shots was exchanged. Officials of the shoe company reported the stolen bag contained $25,000.

CHICAGO, Nov. 26.—Public demonstrations that the packing house workers have not accepted the recent wage reductions scheduled to take effect next Monday will be staged in every packing center in the country next Sunday, Dennis Lane, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen's union, announced today.

The international executive board, which has been meeting here daily for more than a week, will assemble against next Wednesday to decide whether a strike shall be called under the authorization voted several weeks ago.

Three meetings will be held in Chicago Sunday, two in the open prairie and a third for negro workers at a south side club.

Mr. Lane attacked the industrial relations plan under which employees of the five big packers have agreed to give up their employers on wage reductions.

"The so-called industrial relations plan of the packers exists only on paper," he said. "Not one of the packing house concerns has ever called a meeting of all the workers of even one department to select representatives or to vote on a wage reduction."

"Facts are that last March when the packers made a bold attempt to violate the Alton agreement and were called to Washington by President Harding, that they industrially arranged their so-called industrial relations plan. They went through the burlesque of holding an election of representatives, which election consisted of the foreman and timekeeper, 50 men among some of the employees, asking them to vote on a ballot prepared by the company to elect of the names that the company had placed on the ballot."

"The so-called representatives in conference with the packers who have supposedly agreed to a wage reduction have not represented their fellow workers nor advised them with regard to the same."

"Asked if the members of the union would be called out, Mr. Lane said: "Following the meetings on Sunday—the international, executives held will assemble here on Wednesday, the 30th, when definite plans will be formulated with reference to the proposed wage reduction. I will not say now what those plans will be, but you can quote me as saying that the workers, now at starvation wages, are not agreeing to any wage reduction. Forty-five cents an hour is not a sufficient wage to enable a single man to exist, to say nothing of men who have families."

Mr. Lane also charged that an investigation would disclose that the United Charities and Catholic Charities are contributing to the support of the families of packing house workers here.

CHICAGO, Nov. 26.—When Miss Mary McCormick made her operatic debut as Michaela in "Carmen" this afternoon she passed a chapter in her career as romantic as the part she portrays upon the stage.

The first appearance with Mary Garden, Murators and Bakanoff, is a long step from the prairie schooner in which she traveled with her parents to Belleville, Ark. During her childhood this town was her home and she worked as a cowgirl in several places before starting her study of music.

By working without financial aid, singing in church choirs and whenever opportunity offered to make a living, she became the successful one of seventy-five candidates tried out by Miss Garden, director of the Chicago Opera company at Springfield.

During the summer the young woman studied French and Italian to improve her accent and learned the complete score of eight operas, including "Carmen."

PAVING AT HASKELL IS NOW WELL UNDER WAY

HASKELL, TEXAS, Nov. 26.—After more than a year, waiting for the beginning of the paving of the public square, work has begun and everybody realizes that what was first called a dream is a reality and Haskell has begun to have the appearance of a city with the paving of the square and many miles of new sidewalks down and more under construction.

The new $50,000 brick high school building is rapidly nearing completion, which gives Haskell one of the best high school buildings in west Texas.

The $20,000 First Christian church will be completed in about two weeks, giving Haskell the third handsome brick church.

SAYS RELATIONS BETWEEN PHILIPPINE SENATE AND GEN. WOOD ARE ANICABLE

MANILA, Nov. 25.—Relations between Governor General Leonard A. Wood and the Philippine senate are entirely amicable, Manuel L. Quezon, president of the senate, today informed President Baracel of the Porto Rico senate in a cablegram replying to an inquiry.

SECRETARY HUGHES REPORTS PROGRESS OF CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Secretary of State Hughes made the regular daily report of the American armament conference delegates to President Harding today, spending nearly an hour with the president before leaving the executive office except to say that the armament conference would have another open plenary session as soon as business was gotten ready for it.

THREE DEMONSTRATIONS ON PROGRAM FOR CHICAGO

Industrial Relations Plan is Attacked in Statement by Union Officials.

SAYS ARMS SAVING WILL RESULT IN A RAID ON TREASURY

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—"The contemplated saving of several hundred millions of dollars through the limitation of arms will result in hundreds of attempted raids on the United States treasury with frequent legislation," said Representative Peas, chairman of the republican congressional committee, in a statement today.

"The fact that 67 per cent of the total federal revenue is now being expended for wars that are not being fought, and that the balance will remain unchanged for some time," he explained. "The 23 per cent that goes for future wars will be curtailed, we hope, but will in no way make available large sums for any purpose."

Representative Peas, who is chairman of the committee on education, said a recent investigation showed that less than one and one-hundredth per cent of the federal appropriation went for educational purposes.

"An ever-growing popular demand for greater national interest in education," he said, "is the most important feature of the coming generation, demands first call on our resources," he added.

THROUGH TRAINS BETWEEN WICHITA AND WELLINGTON

Effective Sunday, November 7, a new time schedule goes into effect on the Wichita Falls and Northwestern passenger trains between this city and Wellington, which will enable passengers to reach Wellington without a change at Altus as heretofore.

Trains No. 7 and 8 of the Wellington branch will be discontinued on the occasion of the new schedule to go into effect and trains No. 1 and 2 on the main line will be discontinued between Elk City and Altus, and instead will continue to Wellington.

Train No. 2 leaving Wichita Falls at 1:30 p. m. will arrive in Wellington under the new arrangement at 5:10 p. m.

UNWIND RED TAPE AT ELLIS ISLAND TO SAVE A BOY'S LIFE

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Red tape of Ellis Island was swiftly unwound today to save the life of 14-year-old Maximal Salomon, a native of Panama on the steamship Colon yesterday to undergo a delicate brain operation at the hands of Dr. Charles H. Frazer of Philadelphia.

The lad traveled with funds subscribed by residents of Panama City, with whom he was popular because of his ambitious nature and studious habits. Immigration laws required that Maximal be placed in a hospital for observation, but when R. H. Landis, assistant immigration commissioner, learned the facts he permitted Maximal to proceed to Philadelphia today.

M'KINNEY MAN INJURED WHEN 10 DYNAMITE CAPS IN HIS POCKET EXPLODE

M'KINNEY, TEXAS, Nov. 26.—Lester Grant, construction foreman at the Farmersville municipal lake dam, who was seriously injured yesterday when 10 dynamite caps which he carried in his pocket exploded, was resting well at a hospital here today. The caps exploded when a crowbar fell against dynamer.

WOMAN TO COLLECT FROM THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT

PEKING, Nov. 25.—John J. Abbott, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial Savings company of Chicago, who came here as a result of Chinese government's default on a loan of $5,000,000, will leave for the United States tomorrow.

He said today that there had been "no collection," no renewal or no immediate prospects of adjustment of the loan during his 25 days' stay here.

MRS. CAESAR LOMBARDI DIES AT BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA

DALLAS, Nov. 26.—Mrs. Caesar Lombardi, 71, pioneer Texan, died yesterday at the home of a son in Berkeley, Cal. She was the widow of Caesar Lombardi, one time prominent Houston business man and at the time of his death a major president of A. H. Belo and company, publishers of the Dallas-Galveston News.

VIGOROUS PROTEST AGAINST RENEWAL OF IRISH WARFARE

EXPRESSED IN FACE OF EXPECTED COLLAPSE OF NEGOTIATIONS.

LONDON PRESS DISCUSSES THE NEW DEVELOPMENT

Government Cannot Engage in Civil War With Ireland, Says Daily News.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—A chorus of vigorous protest against renewal of warfare in Ireland in the event the present peace negotiations collapse, is raised by the morning newspapers after the meeting yesterday of Premier Lloyd George and Sir James Craig, Ulster premier, in the conference the British cabinet chief informed Sir James that since Ireland had refused to accept allegiance to the crown in return for the utmost recurrence of hostilities.

The government cannot engage in civil war with the Irish nation, if the people of Great Britain are determined that there shall be no war, declares the Daily News, adding: "That is the dominant factor of the situation."

The Daily Herald, the labor organ, says: "A new war would outrage the moral sense of the whole nation and would never receive the sanction of the British people. The trades union and labor movement must resist to the utmost further reference to the arbitration of force."

The men of 11 parties are urged by the Daily Express to rally to the defense of the British empire. It asserts that nothing but public opinion can accomplish this result.

The Westminster Gazette says it believes the British people are "quite determined not to fight any war in Ireland in the interests of anybody else in Ireland."

Further developments are awaited with the keenest anxiety, the newspapers generally finding little comfort in the outlook beyond the fact that negotiations are still proceeding.

STATEMENT IS MADE BY THE ECONOMIST FOR THE BROTHERHOODS.

ARE MADE TO INCLUDE SALARIES OF OFFICIALS

Charges Data in Many Respects Untrue And in Others Misleading.

By Associated Press. WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Railway wage figures supplied by railroad executives to the interstate commerce commission and the railroad labor board were branded as "statistical fallacies" by Frank J. Warnke, chairman of the railroad brotherhoods, in a further discussion today of railroad questions before the senate interstate commerce committee.

Mr. Warnke stated that there had been an increase of $3,000,000 in the annual payroll of the railroads, but that the increase in the salaries of general and divisional officers in the last five years, while the number of these officers increased from 17,000 to 23,000, the effect of this, he added, was to show an increase in annual wages paid to the extent of $3,000,000 more than actually had been disbursed to the employees.

Mr. Warnke told the committee that these salaries of officials are not a part of the railway wage problem and demanded that they be eliminated from wage statistics.

OIL PRODUCTION GAINS IN CENTRAL AND NORTH TEXAS

INCREASE OF 57,000 BARRELS IS GOVERNMENT REPORT.

OKLAHOMA CONTINUES TO LEAD OTHER STATES

Both Texas and Oklahoma Exceed The Production Of California.

By CHAR. B. HAYDEN, Washington Correspondent Wichita Daily Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Texas oil production showed a gain of 57,000 barrels for October over September, according to the statement issued today by the United States geological survey.

Total production of the state for October was 5,363,000 barrels against 5,306,000 barrels for September. This gain was in the central and northern fields where production increased from 4,710,000 barrels in September to 4,832,000 barrels in October.

Production in north and central Texas, however, is still disappointingly low. The output of October a year ago when 6,550,000 barrels were produced.

California production continued to decrease during October, the survey showing the average daily production was 1,149,513 barrels for 30 days, or 34,487,190 barrels for the month, a decrease of 1,149,513 barrels from the 1,284,026 barrels for the month of September.

"All right, Dave," Millman's voice had come to Henderson quickly; "I'll be here as soon as I can get my car and pick up the doctor."

Dave Henderson stepped out into the night and pulled off his hat. His forehead was dripping wet. He walked back to the lamp, lit it, and entered the shed again, and knelt by Teresa's side. She was unconscious.

He bent over her with the flashlight. His hand was crude and clumsy; but it brought him a little measure of relief to see that at least it had been effective in the sense that the bleeding had been arrested. And then his eyes went to the white face again. It seemed as though his mental faculties were blunted, that they were unable only of a gnawing at his brain that was almost physical in its acute pain. Instinctively, from time to time, he looked at his watch.

At last he got up, and went out into the lane again, and from there to the street. It was too soon. He could only pace up and down. It was too soon, but he could not have afforded to keep the doctor waiting if Millman arrived, and he, Dave Henderson, was not there—otherwise he would have stayed longer in the shed. It would be daylight before they came, wouldn't it? It was an hour now, a thousand years, wasn't it, since he had telephoned?

A big touring car rolled down the street. He ran toward it. Millman—yes, it was Millman! The car stopped.

"Quick!" he urged, and sprang in the footboard. "Go to the corner of the lane there!"

And then, as the car stopped again, and Millman, from the wheel, and a man with a little black bag in his hand, sprang out. Dave Henderson had the way down the lane, running, without a word, and pushed open the door of the shed. He held the flashlight steadily for the doctor, though he turned now to Millman.

"You've got a right to know," he said in an undertone, as the doctor bent, absorbed, over Teresa. "Hell's broken loose tonight, Millman—there's been murder further up the lane there in a place they call the Iron Tavern. Do you understand? That's why I didn't dare go anywhere for help. Listen! I'll tell you." And, speaking rapidly, he sketched the details of the night for Millman.

"Do you understand, Millman?" he said at the end. "Do you understand why I didn't dare go anywhere for help?" Millman did not answer. He was looking questioningly at the doctor, as the latter suddenly went.

"We must get her to the hospital at once," said the doctor crisply. "The hospital!" Dave Henderson echoed the word. It seemed to jar at him. He could have jumped an ambulance himself! As well throw the cards upon the table! His eyes involuntarily sought that darker corner of the shed where the package of banknotes, bloodstained now, was hidden in the valise. The hospital, or the police station—in that respect, for Teresa as well as himself, it was all the same!

It was Millman who spoke.

"Wait!" he said, and touched Dave Henderson's arm; then turned to the doctor. "Can we move her in my car?" he asked.

"Yes; I guess we can manage it," the doctor answered.

Millman drew the doctor a little to one side. He whispered earnestly. Dave Henderson caught a phrase about "getting a nurse"—and then he felt Millman's hand press his arm again.

"It's all right, Dave. I guess I'll open that town house after all this summer—to a select few," said Millman quietly. His hand tightened eloquently in his pressure. "We'll take her there, Dave."

IT WAS a big house—like some vast, cavernous, deserted place. Footsteps, when there were footsteps, and voices, when there were voices, seemed to echo with strange loneliness through the great halls, and up and down the wide staircase. And in the dawn, as the light came gray, the pieces of furniture, swathed in their summer coverings of sheets, had seemed like weird and ghostlike specters inhabiting the place.

But the dawn had come hours ago.

Dave Henderson raised his head from his cuffed hands. Was that the nurse now, or the doctor—that footstep up above? He listened a moment, and then his chin dropped back into his hands.

Black hours they had been—black hours for his soul and hours full of the torment and agony of fear for Teresa.

From somewhere, almost coincident with their arrival at the house, a nurse had come. From some restaurant, a man had brought breakfast for the doctor, for the nurse, for Millman—and for him. He had eaten something—what, he did not know. The doctor had gone, and come again—the doctor was upstairs there now. Perhaps, when the doctor came down again, the doctor would allow him to see Teresa. Half an hour ago they had told him that she would get well.

There was strange chaos in his mind. That agony of fear for her, that cold, icy thing that had held a clutch upon his heart, was gone; but in its place had come another agony—an agony of yearning—and now he was afraid—for himself.

Millman had tried to make him go to bed and sleep. Sleep! He could not have slept! He could not even have remained still for five minutes at a stretch! He had been half mad with his anxiety for Teresa. He had wanted to be somewhere where his restless movements would not reach Teresa in her room, and yet somewhere where he could intercept every coming and going of the doctor. And so for hours he had alternately paced up and down this lower hall here, and thence himself upon this great, wide, sheet-covered divan where he sat now, and in those hours his mind, it seemed, had run the gamut of every emotion a human soul could know. It ached now—physically. His temples throbbed and hurt.

His open mouth around the hall, and held as a large sheet-draped piece of furniture over beyond the foot of the staircase. They had served other purposes, these coverings, that to make respectful illusions in the gray of dawn. Remnants that sheet lay the package of banknotes. It made a good hiding place. He had extracted the package from the valise, and had secreted it there during the confusion as they had entered the house. But it seemed to take form through that sheet now, as it had done a score of times since he had put it there, and always it seemed as though a crimson stain that was on the wrapper would spread and spread until it covered the entire package.

He didn't see the face any more now, because he was kneeling down beside the bed, and because his own face was buried in the counterpane

That package—and the crimson stain! It seemed to make of itself a curiously appropriate foreground for a picture that spread away into a vista of limitless years: an orphan child, with its cracked walls, and the painted mottoes whose scrolls gaped where the cracks were; a swirl of horses racing madly down the stretch, a roar of hooves, delicious shouts, clated odds around the bookmaker's paying stand, pinched faces on the outer fringes of this ring; a thirst intolerable, stark pain, the brutal jolting of a buscar through the nights, hours upon hours of a horror that ended only with the loss of consciousness; walls that reared themselves against the invasion of even a ray of sunlight, steel bars and doors, and bolts that clanged, and clanged, until the sound ate like some excruciating thing into the soul itself; and then wolves, human wolves, ravenous wolves, between two packs of dogs, the police on the one hand, the underworld on the other, that snarled and tore at him, while he fought them for his life.

All that! That was the price he had paid for that package there—that, and that crimson stain.

He swept his hand across his eyes. His face grew wet, and his jaws locked hard together. No, he wasn't sure yet that even that was all—that the package there was even yet finally and irrevocably his—to do with as he liked. There was last night—the Iron Tavern—the police again. Was there a connecting link trailing behind him? What had become of the Scorpion? What story had the man perhaps told? Were the police looking for an unknown man—who was Dave Henderson; and looking for an unknown woman—who was Teresa?

Well, before long now, surely, he would know—when Millman got back. Millman, who had intimated that he had an inside pull somewhere that would get the straight police version of the affair, had gone out immediately after breakfast for that purpose.

That was what counted, the only thing that counted—to know where the police stood. Millman ought to be back now. He had been gone for hours. It was taking him an unaccountably long time!

Millman! He had called Millman a straight crook. He had tried to call Millman something else this morning—for what Millman had done for Teresa and himself last night. Only he wasn't any good at words. But Millman had seemed to understand, though Millman had not said much, either—just a smile in the gray eyes, and a long, steady clasp of both hands on his, Dave Henderson's, shoulders.

There was a footstep on the stairs now. He looked up. It was the doctor coming down. He jumped to his feet, and went eagerly to the foot of the stairs.

"Better!" said the doctor cheerily.

"I—I want to see her," said Dave Henderson.

The doctor smiled, as he moved across the hall toward the front door.

"In a few minutes," he said. "I've told the nurse to let you know when she's ready."

The doctor went out. He heard the doctor begin to descend the outer steps, and then pause, and then another footstep ascending; and then he caught the sound of voices. And then, after a little while, the front door opened, and Millman came into the reception hall.

"Dave Henderson's lips tightened, as he stepped toward the other.

"What"—he found his voice strangely hoarse, and he cleared his throat—"what did you find out?"

Millman motioned toward the divan.

"Everything, I guess, Dave," he answered, as he sat down.

"And?" Dave Henderson flung him.

Millman shook his head.

"Better hear the whole story, Dave. You can size it up then for yourself."

Dave Henderson nodded.

"Go on, then!" he said.

"I told you," said Millman, "that I thought I could get inside information—the way the police looked at it. Well, I have. And I have got it from a source that is absolutely dependable. Understand, Dave?"

Dave Henderson nodded again.

"The police start with that telephone message," said Millman. "They believe that it was authentic, and that it was Dago George who sent it. In fact, without it they wouldn't have known where to turn; while with it the whole affair appears to be simplicity itself." He smiled a little whimsically. "They used it as the key to unlock the door. It's no discredit to their astuteness. With nothing to refute it, it is not only the obvious, but the logical solution. Bookie built a great deal better than he knew—for Dave Henderson—when he used that telephone for his own dirty ends. It wouldn't have been so easy for the police to account for the death of three men in the Iron Tavern."

"Three!" Dave Henderson strained suddenly forward. Three! There were two; only two—Dago George and Bookie Skarvan. Only two dead—and a red-headed thing huddled at the foot of the stairs. Was that it? Was that the third one—Cunny the Scorpion? Had it ended with that? Had he killed a man? Last night he would have torn the fellow limb from limb—yes, and under the same circumstances, he would do it again—Teresa upstairs, who had been so close to death, justified that a thousand times over. But—"You mean Cunny the Scorpion—Cunny Smeeke?" he demanded tensely.

"Yes," said Millman. And then, with a quick, comprehensive glance at Dave Henderson's face: "But you didn't do it, Dave."

Dave Henderson's hands were clenched between his knees. They relaxed slowly.

"I'm glad of that," he said in a low tone. "Go on, Millman."

"The man had evidently revived just before the police got there," Millman explained. "He was shot and killed instantly by the police while trying to escape. He had bruises on his head which the police attributed to a fight with Dago George. Dago George, the police assume, woke up to discover the men breaking into his room. They attacked him. He managed to shoot Bookie Skarvan, and grappled with Cunny the Scorpion—the Scorpion's clothing, somewhat torn, and the Scorpion's bruises, bear this out. But in order to account for the time it would have taken to crack the safe, the police believe that the Scorpion at this time only knocked Dago George out temporarily. Then, later, while the Scorpion worked at the safe, Dago George recovered sufficiently to rush and snatch at the phone, and about his appeal for help into it; and then the Scorpion laid Dago George's head open with the blow that killed him, using one of the burglar's tools as the weapon. And then the Scorpion, staying to put the finishing touches on his work to get the safe open, and over-estimating the time it would take the police to get there, was finally unable to make his escape."

"My God!" muttered Dave Henderson under his breath.

"That's got all," said Millman, with a faint smile. "There was known enmity between Dago George and the Scorpion. The Scorpion had come to the Iron Tavern earlier in the evening, one of the waiters testified, and had brought the fat man with him. The fat man was given a room by Dago George. The waiter identified the fat man, obvious acceptance therefore of the Scorpion, as the man who was shot. It dewatered irrefutably—even the Scorpion's prior intentions of harm to Dago George being established. There was some money in the safe, quite a little, but the police are more inclined to attribute the motive to the settling of a gang feud, with the breaking of the safe more or less as a blind."

Dave Henderson was staring across the hall. His lips were tight.

"That waiter!" he exclaimed abruptly. "Didn't the waiter say anything about anybody else who got rooms there last night?"

"I am coming to that," Millman replied. "The police questioned the man, of course. He said that last night, at separate times, a man and a woman came there, presumably to get rooms since they had valises with them, and that they saw Dago George. He did not know whether Dago George had accommodated them or not. He thought not, both because he had neither carried nor seen the valises taken upstairs, and because Dago George invariably refused to give any rooms to strangers. Lots of people came there, imagining the Iron Tavern to be a hotel where they could get cheap accommodations, and were always turned away. Dago George had gone out of that end of the business. The waiter inclined to the belief that the man and woman in question had met the same fate; certainly, he had seen or heard nothing of them since." Millman shrugged his shoulders. "The police searched the rooms upstairs, found no trace of occupancy except the handbag of the fat man, identified again by the waiter—and agreed with the waiter."

"There was Margot," Dave Henderson seemed to be speaking almost to himself. "But Margot was only a tool. All Margot knew was that he was to get the safe open—for some money. I guess Margot, when he finds out that the police don't know anything about him, will think he's lucky. I guess if there's any man in the world who'll keep his mouth shut for the sake of his own hide, it's Margot. Margot isn't going to run his head into a noose." He turned sharply to Millman. "But there's still some one else—the doctor."

"We have been friends, intimate friends, all our lives," said Millman simply. "I have given him my word of honor that you had no hand in the death of any one of those three men, and that is sufficient."

And then Dave Henderson laughed a little, a queer, strange, mirthless laugh, and stood up from the divan.

"Then I'm clear—eh—Millman?" he shot out.

"Yes," said Millman slowly, "as far as I can see, Dave, you're clear."

"And free?" There was fierce assertiveness, rather than interrogation, in Dave Henderson's voice. "It's taken five years, but I've got that money now. I guess I've paid for it; and I guess there's no one now to put a crimp in it any more, not even Bookie Skarvan—providing that little proportion of yours, Millman, that month, still stands."

Millman's face, and Millman's eyes, showed.

"It stands, Dave," he said gravely. "In a month," said Dave Henderson, "even a fool could get far enough away to cover his trail—couldn't he, Millman? Well, then, there's only Teresa left. She's something like you, Millman. She's got something that money back, but she's sort of put out of the running—for about a month, too!"

Millman made no answer.

There," said Millman. "I get you, Dave. Thank God! It's two of us straight crooks—im't it, Dave—two of us!"

Millman's face was blotted out—there was another face that Dave Henderson saw now through an open doorway, a face that lay upon the pillows, and that was very white.

It must be the great, trustant masses of black hair, which crowned the face, that made it look as white as that. And they said—she was getting better! They must have lied to him—the face was so white.

He didn't see the face any more now, because he was kneeling down beside the bed, and because his own face was buried in the counterpane.

And then the great shoulders of the man shook.

His life! That was what she had bought—and that was what she had paid for almost with her own. That was why she lay here, and that was why her face was so white. Teresa! This was Teresa here.

He raised his head at last. Her dark eyes were fixed on him—and they smiled.

She was holding out her hand.

"Dave," she said brightly, "the nurse told me she was going to let you see me for a few minutes—to cheer me up. And here I've been waiting—oh, ever so long. And you haven't spoken a word. Haven't you anything to say?"—she was smiling teasingly with her lips now—"Dave?"

"Yes," he said. "Yes"—his voice choked—"more than I can ever say. Last night, Teresa, if it had not been for me, I—"

Her finger tips could just reach his lips, and they pressed suddenly against them, and sealed them.

"Don't you know that we are not to talk about that, Dave—ever," she said quickly. "If I did anything, then, oh, I am so glad—so glad. You're not to say another word."

"But, I must," he said hoarsely. "Do you think I—"

"Dave, I'll call the nurse!" she said in a low voice. "You'll—you'll make me cry."

It was true. The dark eyes were swimming, full of tears. She hid them now suddenly with their long lashes.

Neither spoke for a moment.

"There's something else, then, Teresa," he said at last. "I'm going to give that money back."

There was no answer—only he felt her hand touch his head, and her fingers play gently through his hair.

"I knew it," she told him.

"But do you know why?" he asked.

Again there was no answer.

Dave Henderson spoke again.

"I remember that I said last night—that I couldn't say anything that way. And—and I'm not trying to say it. It's going back because I haven't the choice. A man can't take his own woman's hand, and from the day I tried to take the life of the woman I loved, I've been a cur. I haven't any choice."

She spoke suddenly. "It's going back, Teresa, whether it means you or not. I understand, Teresa? It's going back—my way."

Her fingers had ceased their movements, and were quiet now.

"Yes," she said.

Dave Henderson raised his bowed head. The dark eyes were closed. His shoulders squared a little.

"That—that puts it straight, then, Teresa," he said. "That lets me say what I want to say now. I've done a lot of thinking in the last few hours when I thought that perhaps you weren't—weren't going to get better. I thought about what you said last night—about God giving one another chance if one wanted to take it."

"Teresa, would you believe me if I told you that I was going to take that chance—from now on?"

The dark eyes opened now.

"I don't think God ever meant that you would do anything else, Dave," she said.

"If He had, you would never have been caught and put in prison, and been through everything else that has happened to you, because it's just those things, Dave, that have made you say what you have just said. If you had succeeded in getting away with that money five years ago, you would have been living as a thief today, and—and you would have stolen more, perhaps, and—and at last you wouldn't even have been a man." She turned her face away on the pillow, and fumbled for his hand. "But it isn't just you, Dave. I didn't say that last night. I said God offered us both a chance. It's not only you, Dave—both of us are going to take that chance."

He leaned forward—his face tense, white almost as the white face on the bed.

"TOGETHER, Teresa?"

She did not answer—only her hand closed in a tighter clasp on his.

"Teresa!" He was bending over her now, smoothing back the hair from her forehead. The blood pounded in a mighty tide through his veins. "Teresa!"

She spoke then, as the wet lashes lifted for an instant and fell again.

"It's wonderful," she whispered. "God's chance, Dave—together—from now on."

Into his face came a great new light. Self-questioning and self-debate were gone. Teresa trusted him. He knew himself before God and his fellows henceforth as a honest man. And he was rich—rich with a boundless, priceless love that would endure while life endured. Teresa! His lips pressed the white forehead, and the closed eyelids, and then her lips were warm upon his own—and then he was kneeling again, but now his arms were around her, folding her to him, and his head lay upon the pillow, and his cheek touched hers.

And presently Millman, coming up the stairs, paused abruptly on the landing, as through the open doorway of the room that was just in front of him, his eyes fell upon Dave Henderson's kneeling figure. And he stood there. And Teresa's voice, very low, and as though she were repeating something, reached him. And creeping into Millman's gray eyes there came a light of understanding as tender as a woman's, and for a moment more he lingered there, and then he tiptoed softly away. And the words that he had heard seemed to have graven themselves deep into the great heart of the man, for, as he went slowly on down the hall, he said them over and over again to himself:

"From now on. . . . From now on. . . ."

The End

Old Man Winter

A Tramp Song

By EDWIN FORD PIPER

Go down the road, and down the road
By leafless hedges and willow;
And stretch your bones on the frosty ground
With shoes to make a pillow.
But it's south, boys, south!
Run away from old man winter.

"O rain come wet me, sun come dry me,
Wind o' winter don't come a-nigh me!"

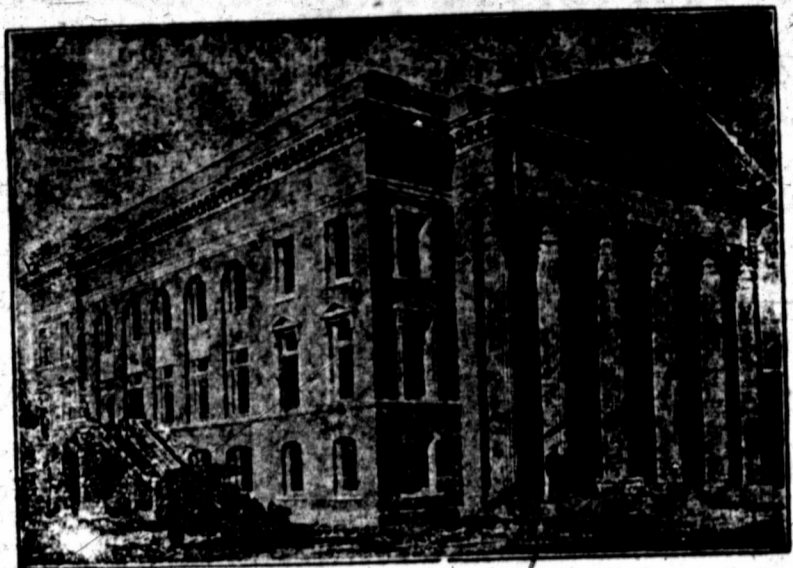

It's late to limp by hill and plain
In rag o' coat and breeches;
The dogs they chase me out of the road
And hunt me down the ditches.
But it's south, boys, south!
And run from old man winter.

"O rain come wet me, sun come dry me,
Sleet o' winter don't come a-nigh me!"

I follow the duck and the mourning dove,
I'm headed south for winter;
I'll throw my foot on a Dixie street
Or lie in jail for the winter.
And it's south, boys, south!
Away from old man winter.

"Rain come wet me, sun come dry me,
Moonlit snow, O don't come a-nigh me!"

ENVY

By RICHARD LLOYD JONES

Inferiority is the root of all envy. The strong covet the respect of others, not their envy. For envy is the rebellion of the incompetent. It is the door plate of ignorance.

Once envy is permitted to take root it crowds out ambition as a weed kills a cultured plant.

Envy benumbs and stupifies determination. It is a confession of despair. It produces nothing. It yields no return. To submit to it is to bankrupt endeavor.

Hatred has the virtue of force. You can battle with resistance. But envy lays down all arms. Irreconcilable, it cannot even be offended into action.

They who are unwilling to hear good tidings of a neighbor and can find happiness only in seeing others depressed to a level with themselves are the most hopelessly lost to the work of the world. Their envy is a passion so full of cowardice that even they have not the confidence to openly own it. The weakest are reluctant to pose as foes of character. Envy is a secret vice.

Because it is passive, because it dare not strike, the hate which the strong bear with greatest patience is the hate of envy.

No vice is more ill-natured than envy. Its competent parts are meanness and malice. It wishes the force of goodness to be lost and the measure of happiness to be abated. It laments prosperity, it sickens at the sight of health.

Upon all occasions that ought to give him pleasure the envious man wilfully puts himself in pain. He converts what should be life's relish into secret anguish. Those things which give the highest satisfaction to others give him the quickest pangs. To him all the perfections of fellow creatures are odious. Youth, beauty, valor, integrity and wisdom are provocations for his displeasures.

To be offended with excellence, to hate a man because the world approves is but the faint praise of a wretched soul.

So false to all good is envy that no man can despise it more than he who envies most. As a slave to a drug he would rise above it if he could, and he envies no one so much as he who can.

Envy hurts only the possessor. Like a scorpion confined within a circle of fire it stings itself to death.

As a moth gnaws a garment, so with slow sureness does envy consume a man.

The truest evidence of character is to be without a touch of envy.

SATURDAY, NOV. 26, 1921.

BURNING CORN.

Iowa reports some of its farmers are selling their corn as low as 17 cents a bushel, with the average around 22 cents. Corn sold for 14 cents a bushel in 1896, but it was grown on land worth about a fifth as much as corn-bearing land of 1921.

All around, the corn raiser is in about the tightest corner of all. He has been hit terrifically by the crash in corn prices. This prevents him from becoming a normal buyer, so the corn situation reacts on all of us, a ball-and-chain on business recovery.

The American Farm Bureau Federation estimates that on November 1, corn stocks totaled 3,452,000,000 bushels, not counting that stored in country mills and elevators.

This is $70,000,000 bushels more than ever consumed and exported in any one year. The law of supply and demand has played havoc with prices and the prosperity of corn growers.

With starvation in many parts of the world, situation rises in which winter west farmers say they must burn corn this winter because it is cheaper than coal.

Department of Agriculture says that, in heat value:

Table with 2 columns: Bushel of Corn at, Ton of Coal at. Rows show prices for 14, 17, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 cents per bushel of corn.

For instance, according to this table, if the farmer cannot get more than 20 cents a bushel for his corn, it is as cheap to burn the corn for fuel as to buy coal at $10 a ton. And so on.

Secretary Mohler of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture disagrees. He believes that corn, even at present low price, cannot be used to greater advantage than in fattening livestock.

Corn, fed to hogs, is stored as food for humans. A hog, fattened on cheap corn now, will in all probability bring a satisfactory price later when it goes to market.

Burning corn for fuel keeps the coal miner idle. Burning corn for fuel holds down the nation's supply of hogs, which have decreased nearly 8,000,000 since 1915.

In some instances, burning corn as fuel may be compulsory. But, as a general proposition, it is an economic fallacy that will only increase the cost of living, curtail available supplies of food, and hinder return to normal conditions.

THE POSITION OF FRANCE.

France was plainly warned in a speech by Lord Curzon, one of the British delegates at the disarmament conference Thursday, that if she pursued an isolated and individual policy, she would not in the long run injure Germany, and would fail to protect herself. Lord Curzon's speech followed one by Premier Briand a few days ago before the conference in which the premier urged France's necessity of maintaining a large armed force in the absence of any guarantee against aggression from Germany.

France is in position somewhat similar to that of the plight of the ancient Britons. On one side she has the "devil" of Germany, whom she forces to observe the terms of the treaty of Versailles only by the threat of force, and on the other side she has the "deep blue sea" of England who is demanding that she reduce her armed forces and who is exerting pressure for moderation of the terms imposed upon Germany.

France is being accused of militarism when she doubtless would be only too glad to reduce her armed forces if Great Britain and the United States would agree to come to her aid in case of aggression from Germany.

VERDICT OF FOUR YEARS IN PRISON IN WALTON CASE

After deliberating a half hour Saturday morning, a jury in the 78th district court found Tom Walton, negro, guilty of the charge of robbing a property over the value of $50 and assessed his punishment at confinement in the state prison for a term of four years. Walton was charged with the theft of a quantity of stolen goods which were stolen from the store of the F. B. Co. in this city on or about July 17 of this year.

Negro Agrees to Get Married After Entertaining 'Law'

The alternative of marrying his bride-to-be for four years in the state prison or returning to jail and having sentence imposed was given to Robert Clark, a genial negro, when arranged before Judge C. G. Satterfield Saturday morning on a charge of affray. The black and his "sweetie" proved to be the best pair of entertainers that has graced the city's bar of justice in some time, and the dignity of the court suffered total annihilation before the case was concluded. The charge on which the two defendants were arrested was a minor one, growing out of a wild row Friday night at a saloon. When questioned Saturday morning by City Attorney Mann as to where he lived before coming to Wichita, Clark, Mark and a third straight at Motorcycle Officer Eyerley and replied: "Waco; me and that man was raised together. Eyerley admitted the charge and told the court that Clark once saved him from drowning in the Brazos river. Could Mister Clark shoot craps? Judge, ah! tell the truth: Ah don't make no practice of it, but when the time comes ah sho can deliver."

AMERICA AIMS TO MAKE CHINA AGAIN SOVEREIGN NATION

HUGHES FIGHTING TO RESTORE POWERS ON NORMAL BASIS.

JAPAN IS INCLINED TO YIELD TO REQUEST

Issue is Chief Remaining Business Before Disarmament Conference.

By MARK SULLIVAN, National Political Correspondent of the New York Evening Post and the Wichita Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—I don't know to what extent the average American reader wants to go into the details involved in a discussion of what this country's arms conference delegates are trying to do about China. A good many things are of high importance in the conference which I suspect the ordinary busy man in Indianapolis or Des Moines or Portland or Kansas City cannot possibly give the time to learn about.

I doubt if the reader who depends upon these articles for following the work of the conference can take the time necessary to know about the broadest outlines and in such a way as to be easily understood by the average reader the question really is one of giving to China its complete integrity of sovereignty in Manchuria and Mongolia belong to China.

This is a sufficient recital of details to suggest what is being discussed within the conference room to state the problem as a whole, in its broadest outlines and in such a way as to be easily understood by the average reader the question really is one of giving to China its complete integrity of sovereignty in Manchuria and Mongolia belong to China.

MANY NOTABLES GATHER AT POLO GROUNDS FOR ANNUAL ARMY AND NAVY STRUGGLE

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Limitation of arms and scrapping of navies were farthest from the thoughts of Uncle Sam's army and navy when the football eleven from Annapolis and West Point clashed in battle array at the polo grounds.

PRINCETON FIGURED TO BE BEST OF THE "BIG THREE" TEAMS

The fact that the personnel of both the Navy and Army academies is made up of men from every state in the Union tends to the meeting of these two institutions on the football field almost a national event.

TEN DEATHS RESULT FROM INJURIES SUSTAINED THIS YEAR IN FOOTBALL GAMES

CHICAGO, Nov. 24.—Football claimed ten victims during the 1921 season, which closed with Thanksgiving games, according to reports to the Associated Press today.

The death list was three less than 1920 and three above the toll of two years ago. Ten lives were lost as the result of games in 1918, twelve in 1917, eighteen in 1916 and fifteen in 1915.

As in former years, the majority of youths killed were members of high school teams. The figures apparently uphold the contention of football experts that proper training and physical condition greatly minimize the danger of the game.

All friends and neighbors will find a hearty welcome here, so come with us to all services.—T. S. PITTINGER, Pastor.

POSTPONED LECTURE ON MAJESTY OF LAW AT THE M. E. CHURCH SUNDAY

The Jewish Christian preacher and a famed chalk talker crowded his subject of last Sunday night off the subject of the woman's home missionary society. The congregation which packed the house seemed amply repaid and satisfied. Sunday night will give the subject, which was postponed, namely, "The Mockery and the Majesty of the Law," illustrated with the district attorney, county attorney and leading members of the bar. It follows up this sermon on Sunday night week by a symposium of "The Majesty and Mockery of the Law." The district attorney will also consented. Once more we cordially invite all the Ku Klux Klan and all the Anti-Ku Klux Klan to hear this sermon. "At 11 a. m. my subject will be "Religion and Personal Efficiency." That sounds rather dry and abstract, but the principles set forth will unquestionably add figures to any man's pay check and help him to hold his job and get a better one. For instance, an illuminating illustration which gives an idea of the connection of religion with personal efficiency. J. W. Bole told me these facts the other day. In his church in Johnston, Pa., there were sixty-five men in the men's class at Sunday school. Eighteen of these men were titheers, that is, they paid a dime out of every dollar they made, thus taking God into business partnership with themselves. All the class were employed in the steel mills. In a time of industrial depression every man in the class lost his job except these eighteen titheers. Not one of them lost his job. The reason is patent—Deeper religious character had increased their efficiency above their fellows, so every man that wants to advance is cordially invited to come and hear that sermon. Christianity is good for two worlds.

There will be special musical features at both services and at the morning service Mayor Cline is going to give one of his brilliant "capule" addresses. "Attention is called to the fact that the night service now begins at 7:15 sharp."

The key to success is work— There is no substitute for it!

In order to do your best work, you must be healthy. You must sleep soundly at night, your nerves must be strong, steady and under perfect control.

If you are accustomed to drinking tea or coffee with your meals or between meals, you may be loading yourself with a very great handicap. Your nervous system may be stimulated beyond what is natural for you.

For tea and coffee contain thein and caffeine. These are drugs, as any doctor can tell you. They are known to irritate the nervous system by their action and to cause restlessness and insomnia, which prevent the proper recuperation of the vital forces.

If you want to be at your best, capable of doing the very best work that lies in you, why not stop drinking tea and coffee? Drink Postum, the rich, satisfying beverage made from scientifically roasted cereals.

Postum contains absolutely no drugs of any kind, but in flavor tastes much like rich coffee. It helps nerve and brain structure by letting you get sound restful sleep.

Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in tin) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes.

Ask your grocer for Postum. Sold everywhere.

POSTPONED LECTURE ON THE MAJESTY OF LAW AT THE M. E. CHURCH SUNDAY

The Jewish Christian preacher and a famed chalk talker crowded my subject of last Sunday night of the program," said Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker to a Times reporter. "The congregation which packed the house seemed amply repaid and satisfied. Sunday night I will give the subject of the Ku Klux Klan. It is my intention to invite the district attorney, county attorney and a leading member of the bar to follow up the sermon on Sunday night week by a symposium of 'The Majesty and Mockery of the Law.' The district attorney has already consented to my invitation. I cordially invite all the Ku Klux Klan and all the Anti-Ku Klux Klan to hear this sermon.

"At 8 p. m. my subject will be 'Religion and Personal Efficiency.' That sounds rather dry and abstract, but the principles set forth will unquestionably add figures to any man's pay check and help him to hold his job and get a better one. For instance, an illuminating illustration which gives an idea of the connection of religion with personal efficiency. J. W. Hole told me these facts the other day. In his church in Johnston, Pa., there were sixty-five men in the men's class at Sunday school. Eighteen of these men were literate, that is, they paid a dime out of every dollar they made, thus taking God into business partnership with themselves. All the class were employees in the steel mills. In a time of industrial depression every man in the class lost his job except these eighteen literates. Not one of them lost his job. The reason is patent. Deeper religious character had increased their efficiency above their fellow-workers. So every man that wants to advance is cordially invited to come and hear that sermon. Christianity is good for two worlds.

"There will be special musical features at both services and at the morning service Mayor Cline is going to give one of his brilliant 'capsule' addresses. "Attention is called to the fact that the night service now begins at 7:15 sharp."

The key to success is work—There is no substitute for it! In order to do your best work, you must be healthy. You must sleep soundly at night, your nerves must be strong, steady and under perfect control. If you are accustomed to drinking tea or coffee with your meals or between meals, you may be loading yourself with a very great handicap. Your nervous system may be stimulated beyond what is natural for you. For tea and coffee contain thein and caffeine. These are drugs, any doctor can tell you. They are known to irritate the nervous system by their action and to cause restlessness and insomnia, which prevent the proper recuperation of the vital forces. If you want to be at your best, capable of doing the very best work that lies in you, why not stop drinking tea and coffee? Drink Postum, the rich, satisfying beverage made from scientifically roasted cereals. Postum contains absolutely no drugs of any kind, but in flavor tastes much like rich coffee. It helps nerve and brain structure by letting you get sound restful sleep. Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes. Ask your grocer for Postum. Sold everywhere.
