NEW ANGLE FOUND IN PHELAN MURDER CASE NEAR JOLLY

BURNED AUTOMOBILE NEAR SCENE WHERE BODY WAS FOUND, IS DISCOVERED.

OFFICERS ASSERT THAT BLOOD STAINS LOCATED

Five People Under Arrest Still Held Although No Charges Are Filed.

A new angle in the Ed Phelan murder case and the assault of Mrs. G. E. Fuller has been unearthed by officers who have been investigating the case since Sunday afternoon.

A burned automobile, partially destroyed, was found near the scene where the body of Phelan was found with six bullet holes in his body. Officers also assert that several blood stains were found in the car.

The automobile is a roadster and the name of the owner was withheld by officers. It is believed, however, that the owner of the car is in no way connected with the incidents leading up to the tragedy or with the tragedy itself.

All of the five people who were members of the party that spent Saturday night near the Mexican road camp are still being held by officers. Further investigations are made. No charges have been filed against any of those under arrest.

General Mexican, members of the road camp, were questioned by officers and it is stated that they told out the statements made by the women in the case with reference to the happenings early Saturday night. The laborers who were questioned stated that they had been invited to the place near the Ford automobile by the men in the party.

The Mexican who is being held in the Clay county jail, according to officers, partially fits the description given by Mrs. Fuller of the alleged highwayman who held up Phelan and Mrs. Fuller and then killed the man and assaulted the woman.

Mrs. Fuller is reported as recovering from the effects of the severe beating administered her.

Believe Deception Of Negro Cause of Suicide of Indian

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., July 11.—Humiliation and grief over the deception of Jim Manuel, Negro, whom he knew when both were poor "bad land" farmers near Muskogee, is believed here to have been responsible for the death of Joe Rector, father of Sarah Rector, millionaire Creek freed girl, who died on a train near Dallas, Texas, Sunday.

Manuel while in the state penitentiary at Jefferson City, Mo., for forgery, told Rector that oil had been discovered near a piece of land which he owned near Tampico, Mexico, and that his land was worth $40,000,000.

Rector, having seen the magic of oil raise his own family from poverty to a quarter million dollar home in Kansas City, credited the story.

But Rose, his wife and Sarah's guardian, had possession of the family money bag. She did not want to put up the $1,000 bond which authorities demanded if Manuel was to be paroled. But finally Joe persuaded her, it is understood.

The bond was made, and with $1,000 expense money in his pocket, Joe started to Mexico with his old Muskogee friend to get some oil millions for himself. Manuel had promised him half of the proceeds from his land for helping him out.

Foster of Texas and Major E. H. Stahlman of Tennessee stressing the importance of the bill to the economic development of the south.

COURT SAYS OIL MEN MISCONSTRUE TEN PER CENT CUT

The county commissioners in session as a board of equalization Monday afternoon passed an order defining certain values and the basis thereof and stated that many of the oil men and oil companies in the county have misconstrued the ten per cent reduction order of two weeks ago.

The board explains that this cut does not apply to oil properties at a definite decision had been reached with reference to this form of property and that by reason of the fact that a reduction was granted the oil men, that this action called the board to make an equitable cut on other properties.

The order as passed by the court Monday afternoon follows: "Be it ordered by the commissioners' court sitting as a board of equalization that it is necessary for said board to define certain values and the basis thereof.

MESDAMES LUCAS AND MILLICAN HOSTESSES

Mesdames W. A. Lucas and T. L. Millican were hostesses Monday afternoon at a surprise miscellaneous party at the home of Mrs. C. B. Wigley, at the Millikan home on Filmore street.

The house was attractively decorated with cut flowers, and after the guests were assembled Mrs. Wigley was invited over, and was very much surprised to find her friends all there. Little T. L. Millican Jr. presented the show, drawing in the gifts in a small blue-crepe covered express wagon. He wore a blue crepe hat to correspond, and made a very nice little messenger.

Refreshments were served to the following: Mesdames Valvo, Robert Brown, George Neer, Millican, McCarty, Grace Lucas, Humphrey, C. B. Wigley, Eastwood and the hostesses.

Be Careful What You Wash Your Child's Hair With

If you want to keep your child's hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Multifid coconut oil shampoo, which is pure and entirely free of alkali, is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing as this can possibly injure the hair.

Simply put two or three teaspoonfuls of Multifid in a cup or glass with a little warm water, then moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries soft, and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Multifid coconut oil shampoo at any drug store. It is very cheap and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months. Be sure your drug-giver gives you Multifid—ad.

How Do You Pronounce It?

"How do you say it?" would be a better heading for these words. And of course you don't say "regard-yourself, but you must have heard other people say it. It is in the same class with the phrase "returned back," and neither of them are as uncommon as one might opine. Needless to say, both are pretty awful, to use a common phrase which more expressive it is than elegant.

Another word, or two other words rather, which the writer has heard in the past few days and which are commonly misused, are "composed" and "comprised." "Composed" seems to be the most familiar word, and is constantly used to refer to people, parties and the wrong things. A group of people is "comprised" of so-and-so; not "composed." "Composed" refers strictly to a whole, such as a prescription, a chemist's formula, a line of words, etc. It should never be used to refer to people.

"Comprised" is used to refer to the whole things in a group, each of which is individual and is not used to blend into the making of one thing, great in a very loose sense. And "suspicion." You may have heard it no later than yesterday. It is a rank barbarian in speech, and as unused or as "illy" for "ill." You may "suspect" something, but you don't "suspicion" it. Suspicion is strictly a noun form; never a verb.

And speaking of "suspect"—it is allowed to loaf on the job a lot, while its familiar imposter, "expect" adventures into otherwise decent phraseology. "I expect so," "I expect he wants to go with us," "I expect that would be the best party." But you don't expect any such thing. You "suspect" it, in the broad sense of suspect. "I think so" is better, though "suspect" is right in many instances. The only things you "expect" are things you think are going to happen, occur, or come to pass. You "expect" guests, or "expect" trouble, or "expect to be happy," or things like that. But you don't "expect" things that you suppose, or think.

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS DR. SNUFFLE HANGS OUT SHINGLE; WHISPERING FOREST ALL AGOG

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

Half a dozen movie "line" parties have seen the big Times Pictorial News Weekly at the Strand theatre in the past few days, and Monday patrons who went especially to see the Pictorial declare that it was even better than the first week.

It's a pretty thing to show off to visitors, because unless they live in a real metropolis they don't have a News Weekly at home. This week's news has some unusually attractive features, one of the chief among which is the young champion swimmer at the Golf club. This sketch shows the boys and girls who won prizes July 4 in the swimming races, and also features Nancy May, the little five year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry May, a local infant skater. This "bab" "champion" is shown in action—very much in action, and the other young people swim and dive for the camera man.

A bridge party at the club, the Wichita Falls Cannery, a big krahring scene near Wichita Falls, depicting one of the biggest farm industries in the West, and the Shriners entertaining five or six hundred Rotary Knot-Hole gang boys at the circus Saturday complete the picture.

More Brides and Grooms.

The coming week will see more brides and grooms, and the Clark wedding, featuring the real treat. Besides the wedding scene, with all the attendants, there will be a view of the double brides and the grooms in their "going-away" clothes—and their going-away clothes aren't the usual kind either! There will be four or five other sketches in the Pictorial.

Telephone the Times.

The Times Pictorial is planned to show the local events of each week, and local artists, guests, etc. If you have an idea of something which ought to be included in the Weekly News, telephone the Pictorial Editor at the Times and tell about it. The suggestion will be gladly received.

Miss Marjorie Woolsey will join the party when she returns from Colorado Springs next week, and Miss Lillian Branding will also go for a few days.

At this very moment the door of the little house opened and an odd-looking little fairy gentleman stepped out. He had knee-breeches and buckled shoes and long coat (tail that trailed on the ground. Also he wore wings embroidered with pictures of canary birds.

He had a sign in his hand which he tucked beside the door. The sign said: "Wanted. A pill-maker and handbag roller at once."

"Let's ask him if we'll do," whispered Nancy.

MONTHS OF SUFFERING

How a Baltimore Girl Recovered Her Health

Baltimore, Maryland.—"For several months I suffered with severe backache and general weakness. I could not sleep comfortably at night for pains in my back. I found your book at home one day and after reading it began at once to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Comfortable again. I have had very good results and some of my girl friends are taking it now. You may use this letter to help other girls, as the letters in your book helped me."

—ROSE WAINMAN, 3016 Roseland Place, Baltimore, Md.

"That is the thought so often expressed in letters recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Those women know what they have suffered, they describe their symptoms and state how they were finally made well.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine made from medicinal roots and herbs, and without drugs, to relieve the sickness women so often have, which is indicated by backache, weak feelings, nervousness, and no ambition to get anything done or to go anywhere. It has helped many women. Why not try it?"

SCIENCE TELLS US

By René Bache

Experts Recognize the Sea Serpent, "Hobgoblin" of the Ancients, as Real

OF ALL funny notions about the Gulf Stream, the oldest was the theory published recently that the railroad viaduct connecting the mainland of Florida with Key West had so diverted the course of the great oceanic river as to chill the climate of the British Isles.

The United States Weather Bureau says that the Gulf Stream does not influence the temperature even of our own North Atlantic Coast, though, figuratively speaking, it really does carry with it a tropical climate. Which means simply that many tropical fishes and other forms of life native to Southern latitudes follow its warm current northward.

This, according to a theory which science is at least well inclined to accept, accounts for the occasional appearance of the sea serpent off our shores. That remarkable creature whose normal habitat is the depths of the tropical ocean, now and then comes north as the Gulf Stream, perhaps following the prey on which it is accustomed to feed. For a number of years it has failed to turn up, but perhaps this summer it may do so, furnishing excitement at the beach resorts and "acres heads" for the newspapers.

It will not do to declare the sea serpent a myth. The Smithsonian monograph on deep-sea creatures, by Goodrich and Bean, than which there is no higher authority, says: "It cannot be doubted that somewhere in the depths of the seas are living certain animals unknown to science and of great size, which come occasionally to the surface and give a foundation to such stories as those of the sea serpent."

The late Prof. Agassiz wrote: "It is at least reasonable to suppose that there exists an animal corresponding more or less to the descriptions given of the sea serpent."

People commonly speak of the sea serpent as if there were only one of its kind, but it is manifest that if such a creature exists a species must be concerned. It may be, perhaps, a very rare species, inhabiting the profoundest depths from which only an occasional individual emerges.

Science knows very little about the animals that dwell in the depths of the ocean. A few, mostly very remarkable in one way or another, have been brought up with dredge nets, but nobody can tell what "monsters and chimeras dire" may not prowl in those dark and mysterious abysses.

It is not necessary to suppose that the sea serpent is a snake. Indeed, the creature is much more likely to belong to some other zoological order. One notes that whenever and wherever reported it is seen always during the summer months or in early autumn, suggesting the idea that it is a tropical animal, wandering into Northern latitudes in the warm season of the year.

There is so much well-authenticated evidence in the sea serpent's behalf that one cannot throw it scornfully aside. Affidavits of whole ship's companies—as in the case of the Daedalus, the Pauline and the Osborne—cannot be regarded as worthless. Furthermore, one is struck by the remarkable likeness of descriptions given by observers. Details vary in different narratives, but the important characteristics of the animal are ever the same.

IT HAS an enormously long neck and huge eyes; its tail is of great length and it seems to have four flippers or swimming paddles, by the aid of which it travels at high speed through the water. When viewed from near at hand it is observed to have a sort of mane that floats on the surface. It is dark above and light in color on its under side. Apparently it is at least 150 feet long.

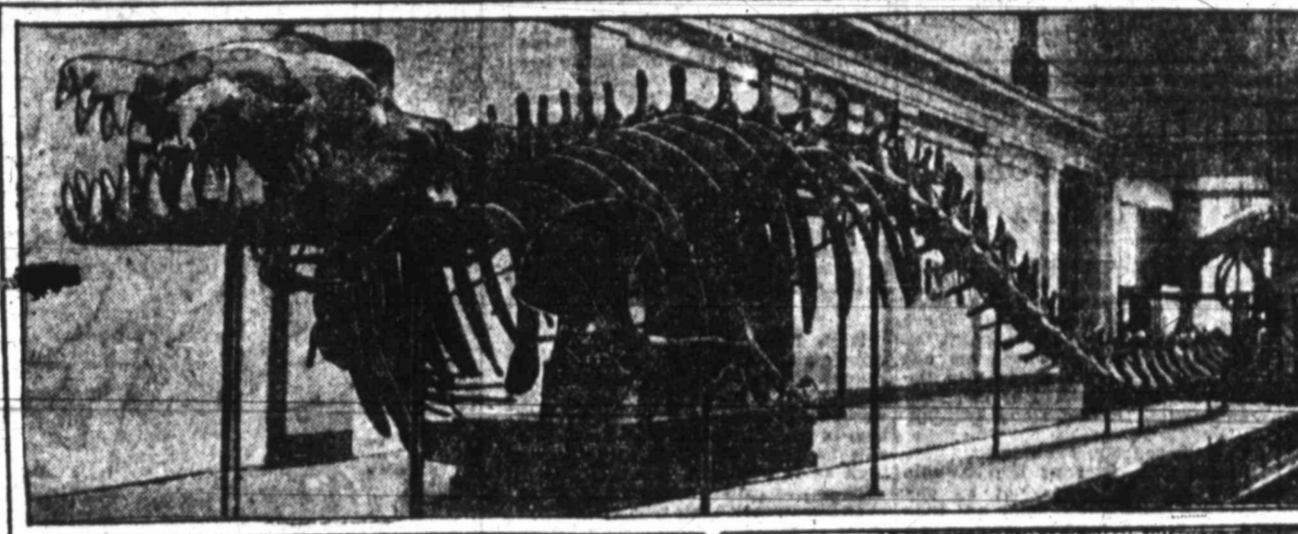

On the 6th day of August, 1848, H. M. S. Daedalus was cruising in North Pacific waters. The morning was clear, with only a slight haze. A shout from the watch in the foretop brought all hands on deck, and officers and men lined up at the weather rail to behold an extraordinary sight. Less than a quarter of a mile off the weather bow was swimming, in an almost calm sea, what looked like a gigantic snake. Sixty feet of its length was visible, and its head was erected four or five feet above the surface. The creature was swimming at a speed of about fifteen miles an hour and was so close at hand that officers on board were able to observe it at leisure with field glasses. Its back was dark brown, likewise the head, and the throat yellowish white. Boats were lowered with the intention of going in chase and harpoons were hastily seized, but before a start could be made in pursuit the monster suddenly disappeared.

In 1877 an animal of like description was seen in the Mediterranean by the officers and crew of Queen Victoria's yacht, the Osborne. Eleven years later, near Rockport, Me., a sea serpent of monstrous size caused much excitement. But instances of the kind have been so numerous that no attempt can be made to chronicle them. On one occasion a steaming, the Connecticut, reached port several days overdue and reported that she had lost much time chasing an enormous snake which "fed across the sea in spirals."

Most remarkable was the adventure of the bark Pauline, whose officers and crew made affidavit that on July 8, 1873, in latitude 5 degrees 13 minutes south, longitude 35 degrees west, they all saw three large sperm heads of the sea serpent. Suddenly some sort of monster appeared just ahead and, throwing an arm 100 feet or more in length around one of the whales, encircled it three times and literally dragged it headfirst to the bottom. Subsequently what was thought to be the same creature was seen to uplift an arm sixty feet above the surface.

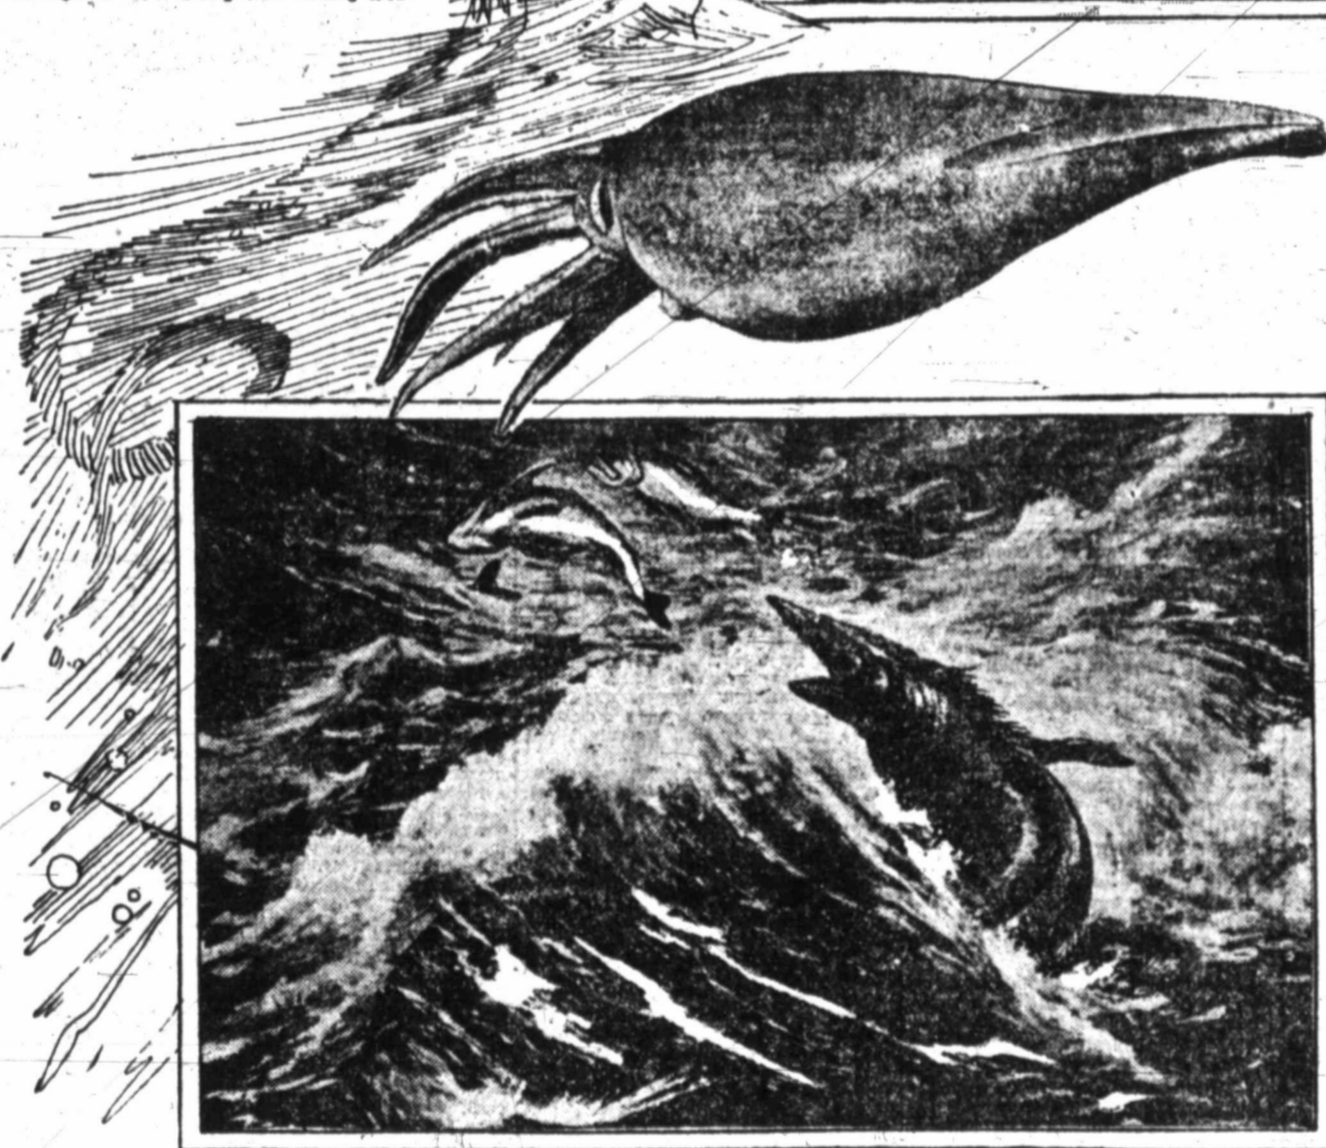

It is manifest that the animal here concerned was not a snake. What, then, was it? Apparently it was a giant squid, which of all denizens of the deep is surely the most formidable. When full-grown it weighs more than five tons, with two arms or tentacles 100 feet long. These, for grasping its prey, are supplemented by eight shorter tentacles.

Whatever may be said of the sea serpent, there is no mystery about the giant squid. A specimen with arms fifty feet long—or, to speak accurately, a life-like and life-size reproduction in paper mache of one that was stranded on the shore of Trinity Bay, Newfoundland, some years ago—now hangs from the lofty ceiling of a hall in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. It is a frightful-looking creature, there is no mystery about the giant squid. pent, there is no mystery about the giant squid. It is a frightful-looking creature, ture, but the original was only half-grown. The giant squid is a mollusk. It is a creature of the ocean depths, rarely appearing at the surface. Always it swims backward, making progress by expelling water rearward from a sort of siphon. Brown on top and lighter in color beneath, its tail expands horizontally in two winglike flukes. Seen swimming, with its tail erect above the water, the tail might easily be mistaken for a head, while the long tentacles dragged floating behind and undulated by the waves would suggest a snake.

Thus it will be understood why some naturalists are disposed to believe that stories of the sea serpent, are in reality based upon occasional appearances of this monstrous mollusk. In Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" an attack is made by several of them upon Captain Nemo's submarine craft while it is floating at the surface with the hatch open; one of his sailormen is dragged into the depths, and they are driven off with much difficulty by hacking at their tentacles with axes.

The giant squid is properly a denizen of tropical seas. Its species seems to be more numerous in the Indian Ocean than anywhere else. In those waters the fishermen know not when he may see a monster with goggling eyes a foot in diameter rise out of the depths and sling across his boat a snake-like tentacle armed with suckers so powerful that, once fastened upon an object, nothing short of horsepower can pull them off. For such an emergency he keeps ready at hand a beam knife. If captured, the man will be quickly drawn into the embrace of the eight shorter arms and the frightful creature will sink with him to the bottom, there to tear him to pieces at leisure with its parrot-like beak.

ON the twenty-sixth of October, 1873, two fishermen were out in a small boat near the east end of Belle Isle, Conception Bay, Newfoundland, when they saw a strange object floating on the water. They struck it with a gaff and instantly it shot out two enormous arms over the boat, trying to seize its assailants. One of the men, Thomas Pico, cut off both arms with an axe, whereupon the creature fled, darkening the water with an inky fluid. One of the severed pieces of tentacle, seventeen feet long and three and a half feet in circumference, was sent to Yale College. Its size indicated that the squid was not more than half-grown.

In 1881, on the 30th of November, between Madeira and Tenerife, the French dispatch steamship Alecton came upon a huge squid floating at the surface of the sea. According to the story, it was asleep, but presumably it was dying. The vessel was stopped, and several volleys were poured into the animal from rifles. Harpoons were thrown into its body, but they would not hold. Finally a rope with a running knot was slipped over its tail and an attempt was made to hoist it upon deck; but its great weight caused the rope to cut through and, falling back into the sea, it disappeared.

In the National Museum at Washington is the skeleton of a marine animal which when alive must have corresponded rather closely in its appearance to descriptions of the sea serpent. Indeed, as it swam along the surface of the sea it could have looked like nothing so much as a gigantic snake.

It was seventy feet long, mostly tail, with a head like that of an alligator, and four great flippers or swimming paddles. Quite possibly it had a mane. The creature is called a "zeuglodon" and is supposed to be extinct. It was a mammal, and in its day must have been a tyrant of the seas. Its head was four feet long and its jaws were armed with teeth, which indicate that the animal was ferocious and predatory. In front were eight huge teeth for seizing and tearing, and back of these a series of flat teeth with saw edges for cutting.

It is not a certainty that the species is extinct. There may be a few left alive. Not so very long ago zeuglodon was exceedingly numerous in the coastal waters of our Atlantic and Gulf States. How numerous they were is shown by the fact that in Mississippi and Alabama walls on farms are sometimes built of their bones. Apparently when they died their carcasses drifted ashore and were buried in the sand or mud of shallows. Hence the accumutions of bones which nowadays are turned up by spade and pickax, with teeth (which were set loose in the jaws, like those of an alligator) scattered among them.

Nearly fifty years ago a fabled name, Koch got hold of the most perfect skull of a zeuglodon that has ever been found. He stuck it on the end of a long string of zeuglodon vertebrae (the latter representing two or more of the original animals) and exhibited the composite as the skeleton of a sea serpent, giving it the pseudo-scientific name of "hydrarchus." It excited great popular curiosity and brought him much money; but in a fire in Chicago it was mostly destroyed, the skull being fortunately preserved.

There was a good deal of excitement recently about a plesiosaur which was alleged to have been seen in a lake in Argentina. If a reptile of that species (which was, however, marine, and not belonging to fresh water) were really living today it would make a fairly creditable sea serpent, as suggested by a naturalist, who has described it as resembling a snake threaded through the body of a tortoise. It is believed that the plesiosaur became extinct some millions of years ago, but nobody can prove it. Animals equally ancient still survive; crocodiles, for instance.

A few years ago the skipper of a vessel at San Francisco from the South Pacific told a story which caused much wonder to scientific men. While becalmed in twelve fathoms of clear water he had seen crawling over the bottom an extraordinary animal of gigantic size. Its neck was enormously long and its tail rather short. It had paddles like the flippers of a turtle.

In brief, its description answered in every detail to that of a plesiosaur. The skipper was not an educated man, and he was hardly possible that he could ever have heard of a plesiosaur. Yet the points he gave were accurate, even to the number of toes on each foot.

The plesiosaur inhabited in great numbers the vast shallow sea which 7,000,000 years or so ago extended all over Texas, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska and the territory northward as far as the Arctic Ocean. But those same waters, at the same period, were infested by much larger reptiles which really did resemble rather strikingly the modern sea serpent, as the latter is commonly described. They were not snakes, yet were "python-like."

Curiously enough, while the modern marine hobgoblin remains such a mystery, we know more about these ancient sea serpents than about any other reptiles of the ancient past. We know what they ate, the like, how they lived, what their bodies and even their coiled markings. Skin casts in the rocks (originally mud) which preserve their skeletons occasionally show plain traces of pigment in stripes that adorned their bodies.

There were at least ten species of these python-like "mosasaurs," whose range was by no means restricted to the cretaceous sea, above mentioned. Bones of six species have been dug up in New Jersey. How numerous they were may be judged from the circumstance that in one valley in Wyoming the late Prof. O. C. Marsh came across seven of their skeletons lying close together. When alive they must have averaged sixty feet in length.

THE typical mosasaur had a skull five feet long, and its lower jaw was hung like a snake's, with an attachment of cartilage, enabling it to open its mouth enormously wide. Its head was flat and pointed and its long tail flat and deep like that of an eel. Provided with four powerful swimming paddles, it could doubtless travel through the water at a tremendous pace.

At Tully Bay, in the summer of 1867, an enormous monster was seen advancing into the harbor. It was about 100 feet long and traveled with an undulating snake-like movement. Its head was crowned with long hair, and keen-sighted persons among the terrified observers declared that they could see its eyes. The military were called out and a brisk fire was opened upon the creature at 500 yards. That it was hit and disabled by wounds became evident when it ceased to move. Boats were thereupon sent to examine it and it was found to be nothing but a mass of seaweed.

Undoubtedly there have been many similar cases of illusion where the sea serpent was concerned. In one instance a number of porpoises swimming in single file, their leaps suggesting the undulations of a gigantic snake, gave rise to a mistake of the kind. Another supposed "monster" was in reality a stem of giant kelp 300 feet long which had been torn loose from its bottom mooring by a storm, presumably. It bore at one end a bulb the size of a barrel, crowned with a tuft of leaves forty feet long. Tossed by the waves in such a way as to suggest a snake swimming, the huge plant bore an aspect well calculated to deceive the casual and inexperienced observer.

Nevertheless, the sea serpent may exist; it would be a rash person who should deny the possibility, or even the likelihood—though, as already said, if there be such an animal, it is presumably not a snake at all, nor a reptile of any kind. Some day, perhaps, a dead individual of the mysterious species may be cast upon shore or be found floating on the sea. If that shall happen, it will afford a most interesting contribution to our knowledge of natural history and will solve a puzzle which for thousands of years has vexed mankind.

PEOPLE are losing their teeth nowadays as never before. Voluntarily, however, to a large extent. They are glad to get rid of them.

"Really, my dear, they aren't worn any more," said a woman of fashion, lighting a fresh cigarette. "Except, of course, the kind you buy. They are infinitely less troublesome."

Doctors nowadays are constantly sending patients to the dentist's to have their teeth examined. Teeth are suspected of causing all sorts of bodily mischiefs. Is it just a new medical fad?

Evidence seems to show that in the main it is not. There is excellent reason for believing that teeth are accountable for many physical ailments whose origin has hitherto been deemed mysterious.

The physical "miseries of old age," of which so much is so commonly or so severely older people, do not in later life. This is particularly true of rheumatism and gout; and one important reason seems to be that our teeth are better cared for and preserved. A decaying tooth is a germ factory. It is producing a continual supply of noxious bacilli which, being swallowed, are likely to find their way through blood vessels and lymph channels to the joints, where they lodge, multiply, feed upon the tissues and set up inflammation. The result is what we call rheumatism.

But incomparably worse than the decayed tooth is the abscessed tooth. You may go about for years with a dozen abscesses at the roots of your teeth and never suspect anything wrong in that quarter, though in the meantime perhaps they are causing you utmost distress with one malady or another. Your dentist gives you no warning; the presence of abscesses is no more apparent to him than it is to you. But the time comes when your physician is led to suspect that your teeth may be making the trouble. He tells you to have your jaws X-rayed, and thereby the source of the mischief is revealed.

You get rid of the infected teeth and pretty soon you find that you are getting well.

What happens in such a case is this: The abscesses, formed by pus-producing bacteria, are squeezed every time one chews. The squeezing presses pus out of them, and a poisonous "toxin" is thereby forced out and through lymph vessels to other parts of the body. There is no telling where it will do mischief. Quite possibly it may affect the eyes.

The writer knew a man whose eyes were entirely disabled by a cause that seemed mysterious. Blindness threatened him. The oculist said, "The trouble comes presumably either from your teeth or from your tonsils. Removal of the tonsils did no good. Most of the man's teeth were pulled out, but he did not get well."

Now here was a curious joint. The remaining teeth received from the X-rays a clean bill of health; they were declared all right. Nevertheless, in desperation the man had them pulled out, seven in all, and three proved to be abscessed. Out of one of the sockets there dropped a pus sac as big as a very large pea.

When this was accomplished the man's eyes got rapidly well. They had been suffering from toxin poisoning.

Unfortunately, the X-rays, while often furnishing valuable affirmative evidence where tooth infections are concerned, are not to be counted on for reliable negative testimony. In other words, if they say that your teeth are not abscessed they may be lying. This is liable to leave the sufferer up in the air. His only way to be absolutely sure is to sacrifice all his teeth.

Photography by Wireless

THROUGH wireless means, supplementing in its mechanism the human eye, we shall be able before long to talk to a person hundreds or thousands of miles away, and at the same time see that person's face. Conversation by radio will thereby be rendered more intimate and agreeable. We can even watch the other person's changes of expression while he talks—see him smile at a joke while we hear him laugh, etc.

Nikola Tesla, the famous electrician, is responsible for this prediction. He says that he is now trying to perfect the requisite apparatus for this expected new development of radio, which he calls "television."

Saving the Baby's Eyes

IN TWENTY-FOUR of our States doctors and midwives are required by law to give eye medicine to all new-born babies. A national committee for the prevention of blindness is now trying to make this kind of attention obligatory everywhere.

Any new-born child is liable to be attacked by a virulent ophthalmia, which, unless promptly checked, will destroy the sight. Thousands of blind persons in this country owe their dreadful misfortune to neglect of a simple preventive measure by physician or nurse. A few drops of ordinary formalin in a tumblerful of water, freely administered as an eye wash, would have saved their sight.

It is a fact worth while for anybody to know that three drops of formalin in half a tumblerful of water, liberally used with an eye-dropper, will quickly cure a "cold in the eye" or almost any case of acute conjunctivitis. But beware the pure stuff, which is dangerously powerful. Many persons have learned, to their subsequent misfortune, that blindness, or, in fact, eye trouble of any kind is not to be experimented with. By making obligatory the treatment of the newly born, science is again demonstrating its efficacy in the conservation of human life.

Digging Made Easy

THE new method of digging a ditch along a side of a railroad track—to hitch a kind of scoop to the front of a locomotive. By this means twenty miles of ditch can be panned in one day at a cost of about $0.25 per mile.

The ditch can be thus dug three feet deep and 1.5 feet wide from the center line of the track, the amount of dirt removed being eighteen cubic feet per linear foot of ditch. The operation of the digging machine is controlled from the deck of the locomotive by air valves.

Contrasted with the old pick-and-shovel method, the locomotive ditch digger has achieved what, years ago, was regarded as a physical impossibility so far as speed is concerned.

And all Monday afternoon little fellows, candidates for membership in the boy's Rotary Knot Hole Gang, were swarming into the office saying somebody told them that The Times said the passes were to be given out for the last time Monday.

People apparently never hesitate to take somebody else's word for a mis-statement or mistake in the newspaper.

THE REAL ISSUE IN THE SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN.
While one of the candidates is running as a simon pure Ku Kluxer, another as a sympathetic Ku Kluxer, one as a genuine prohibitionist and one as an anti-prohibitionist it appears that the only real issue in the senatorial campaign is the tariff issue and on this issue there are two outstanding candidates.

THE "BREAK" OF DAWN

REFUSE TO GRANT CITY INTEREST AGAINST COUNTY

THREE DISTRICT JUDGES HEAR CASE INVOLVING ROUTE OF MERIDIAN HIGHWAY.

COURT UNANIMOUS IN ITS DECISION TUESDAY

Held That Commissioners Have Power of Selecting Route of Road in City.

Judge H. R. Wilson, Judge E. W. Napier and Judge P. A. Martin, the three district judges of this county, unanimously decided to refuse the injunction as prayed for by the city of Wichita Falls against the county to restrain the latter from paying the route selected in the city for the Meridian highway.

The decision of the court was rendered at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon in a session held in the court room of the county commissioners building during the morning session. The court held that it constituted the special highway law to mean that the county commissioners had the power of selecting the route that highways were to take through the city.

The suit was brought by the city on the basis that it was thought probable that the property of the Gulf Production company would be purchased, which would give access to the mouth of Jalonio, provided it was possible to get the consent of the Wichita Falls and Southern railroad for a crossing at that point.

Following the decision of the court the city gave notice of appeal. Attorneys A. H. Carrigan and W. H. Townsend and City Attorney Mann represented the city in the case.

HIGH SCORES AMONG THE FIRST PLAYERS QUALIFYING ROUND

SKOKIE COUNTRY CLUB, GLENCOE, Ill., July 11.—High scores prevailed among the first players in today's qualifying round of the national open golf tournament to finish nine holes. A rain in the morning had left the course soggy and high shots plunked on to the fairways and greens like a ton of lead.

The first man to shoot par on the first nine was George M. Christ of Rochester, N. Y., with a 34.

Shortly before noon a storm suddenly swept up from the west and the players were soon shooting in a cloudburst which made it impossible to follow the flight of the ball.

There was active or general buying but recent sellers showed a disposition to bid higher, and the price of many stocks advanced. There was a general decline in futures prices.

COTTON MARKET. NEW YORK, July 11.—Yesterday's cotton market was characterized by a steady to rising in the cotton market during today's early trading.

CITY WILL PUSH INJUNCTION SUIT AGAINST COUNTY

The city council in a special meeting Tuesday morning authorized the city attorney to go ahead with the injunction suit which was passed over by Judge H. R. Wilson Saturday afternoon.

The county commissioners seem to be willing to comply with the city's

FINAL PASSAGE OF ORDINANCE GIVING KATY A FRANCHISE

Ordinance 411 granting permission for the M., K. & T. railroad to erect a freight house and to change some of the tracks necessary in the construction was passed on its third and final reading by the city council in a special meeting Tuesday morning.

Work on the new building will probably be postponed indefinitely on account of the strike at present, but the railroad company hopes to finish the work as early as possible.

MAYFIELD DELIVERS AN ADDRESS AT HASKELL

HASKELL, TEXAS, July 10.—Hon. Earl B. Mayfield spoke for more than an hour and a half to a large audience in the district court room Monday afternoon. Mr. Mayfield stressed very forcibly his position on the transportation question. He clearly illustrated what he termed the injustice of the position of the interstate commerce commission and its infringements of state commission, and bitterly denounced the Eech-Cummins bill.

He discussed at length his position on agriculture, recommending long term credits of from one to two and a half years to the farmers and stockmen. He also stressed his opposition to immigration and favors collecting every dollar of European debt to America.

The speaker paid loyal tribute to the ex-service men, concluding with the statement that he is running on his merits alone and not on the demerits of his opponents if they have any.
