BY JACK SCOTT

Many rare experiences have come to Ted Souder's way during his tenure as mayor of Cross Plains. One which has far eluded him, though, is that of performing a marriage ceremony.

He confides that he's available for the chore but close friends predict the bachelor would be more nervous in the role than would the contracting lovers.

There's an old adage, "Thunder in February brings frost in April," which has been debated for years.

In 1961 Kenneth Jordan named local gardeners that under had been heard in Cross Plains at midnight, 15, and that planting would be later than usual.

A memorandum was sent on the calendar in newspaper office to check his forecast and truth the old proverb. Eight days later — right on the nose — came a hard frost which nipped young vegetation and caused the local polsterer to grin and say: "old you so."

With loud claps of thunder repeatedly heard here today, Feb. 3, local people again have an opportunity to check the adage's accuracy in April.

ere's something new in Texas election laws.

Democratic Precinct Chair-Alton E. Hornsby points that it is no longer possible to have a write-in election for a lucrative post unless is the name of at least candidate printed on the ticket. If no candidate's name is on the ticket it becomes no ticket and write-in votes will be tabulated.

ceptions to this rule are selections of such officials by county and precinct chairmen for the Democratic and Republican parties. The posts are not regarded as lucrative jobs, persons selected by officials of a political party and not a legally-constituted subdivision.

Pictured with the winning exhibitor is Charles Needham, Fort Worth Cab & Baggage Company executive, who bought the top lamb at auction for $400.

Burkett Girl's Lamb Wins At Fort Worth

Vicki Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Brown of Burkett, showed the grand champion Southdown lamb at the Fort Worth Livestock Exposition and Fat Stock Show last week.

The cute little Burkett miss nosed out her cousin, Ronnie Edington, of Cross Plains for first place. He took second, third and seventh places in the Southdown class.

Vicky's lamb was one of the show's top sellers bringing $400 at auction being bought by Charles Needham of the Fort Worth Cab and Baggage Company.

In addition to the three prize-winners in the Southdown class, Ronnie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Deel Edington of Cross Plains, had four other winners in lamb competition. He exhibited the second, 21 and 22 place finishers in the Hampshire division and the 19th placer in Crossbred.

Scott Odom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Odom of Cross Plains, sold his reserve champion Angus steer of the junior division of the Fort Worth Show for $1,300. The animal was bought by Charles Ringler, representing Leonard Brothers.

Jim Freeman, another Cross Plains boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hub Freeman, pocketed $800 from the sale of his Charolais steer which was reserve champion of his class in the junior division at Fort Worth. His calf was bought by Monig's Jim won $75 toward purchase of his Charolais in scramble-calf competition at the Callahan County Sheriff's Posse Rodeo in Baird last May, the prize having been posted by Higginbotham's and the Citizens State Bank of Cross Plains.

Another Callahan County exhibitor, Weldon Lynn Edwards, son of Mr. and Mrs. Weldon Edwards of Clyde, sold his reserve champion Hereford steer of the junior show for $800. It was bought by the Fort Worth National Bank.

Businessmen Endorse All Of City's Bond Proposals

Business and professional men present at the regular monthly meeting of Cross Plains Chamber of Commerce voted unanimously support Tuesday to the $150,000 bond election for the City of Cross Plains to be settled at the polls Feb. 15.

The proposed issues call for $114,000 worth of improvements to the waterworks, $22,000 for a municipal swimming pool and $14,000 for replacement of lines in the city-owned gas distributing system.

Mayor Ted Souder answered questions at the meeting and pointed out that bond experts have assured the City Council that the obligation can be retired without any increase in local taxes.

"The $1.50 rate cannot be hiked," the Mayor said, "neither is it necessary. The Attorney General in studying the Cross Plains proposal ruled that 90 cents out of each $1.50 collected from taxes would be adequate to retire the bonds."

The mayor pointed out that the city should be able to obligate 90 cents out of each $1.50, because for the past several years the entire $1.50 has gone into a sinking fund for bond retirement.

Businessmen favored the swimming pool being located near the downtown district, in order that it could be more closely supervised and at the same time possibly offer some commercial advantage.

A full explanation of the forthcoming bond issue is detailed in a legal notice appearing on page seven of today's issue of the Review.

Callahan Veterans Paid $177,287 Last Year

Callahan County veterans and their families received benefits totaling $177,287 during 1963.

That information was contained in a letter received this week by B. C. Chrisman, Callahan County veterans service officer, from Charles L. Morris, executive director of the Veterans Affairs Commission, of Austin.

Morris' letter said: "None of the benefits paid by the federal government to veterans, their dependents and survivors are automatic. Each person must first make application for any benefits to which he or she may be entitled."

Chrisman has been repeatedly cited for superior work and good representation of veterans and their dependents. Well informed sources say the large amount of federal money which came to this county last year verifies the outstanding job he is doing.

Band's Indiana Trip Looms Sure

Of the $6,330 required to send 63 members of Cross Plains High School Band to Indianapolis in May for the 500 Festival, world's foremost auto racing event, only $1,070 more is required. More than 84 per cent of the money is now in hand.

A check of accomplishments thus far in fund raising was made Monday night and it was learned that $1,410 has been raised among band parents. In addition, the 63 school bands-men have underwritten $50 each for a total of $3,150 to pay meals and lodging for the eight-day trip. Another $700 is available in the Band Booster Club treasury. "The band parents and the kiddos themselves have dug deep into their pockets to finance this trip," said Director Wayne McDonald yesterday, "and we are now hoping that a number of our friends on the outside will contribute the remaining $1,070."

Major items of expense for the trip are: $2,680 for two chartered buses, $500 for miscellaneous incidentals and an estimated $3,150 for food and lodging. Contributions may be handed to Mrs. Forrest Walker or Mrs. Tommie Harris, members of a solicitation committee; to Gene Rhodes, president of the Band Booster Club; to Director McDonald, or left at the Citizens State Bank.

The Cross Plains band is one of the few student musical organizations in the nation to be invited to appear in the Indianapolis event and only band of any type to go from Texas.

With $1,070 more needed to finance the trip, plans are to announce from week to week the progress being made. A list of donors, other than band parents, will be prepared in time for publication in next week's issue of this newspaper.

Bandsmen will conduct a sale of light bulbs Saturday, the profits from which will go into the fund being raised for the trip. Last Saturday night's chili supper netted $112, which goes for the project.

An admission of 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for students will be made.

Proceeds for the project will go to a fund being raised by the students for a trip they plan to make after graduation. At present they have $531.44 in the treasury.

3 Types Of Poisonous Snakes Inhabit Cross Plains Area

It is a widely known fact that more persons die of snake bite in Texas than in any other state. This startling fact has encouraged many Texans to acquire a working knowledge of first-aid treatment for snake bite to be utilized in a time of emergency. In addition, study has been given to quick identification of poisonous reptiles and the areas where they are most likely to be encountered.

The Cross Plains Review, feeling that its readers are vitally interested in this subject, has researched several recently-distributed works and digests the data in this article to pertain to only the types of poisonous snakes reported to inhabit this immediate area.

Bulletin number 31, "Poisonous Snakes of Texas," published by the Texas Game & Fish Commission, is authority for the fact that only three species of poisonous reptiles are to be found in the Cross Plains area. They are: the copperhead, of which two separate types exist here; the cottonmouth, sometimes mistakenly called a water moccasin, and the rattlesnake, of which there are 10 distinct types in Texas and five of which are to be found in this section of the state.

Four kinds of copperheads are known in Texas. Texas Game & Fish Commission has evidence of only one type inhabiting the Cross Plains area. It is the Broadbanded copperhead, however, local persons report having seen also the Northern copperhead, said to be more a native of East Texas.

The Broadbanded copperhead has wide, straight-edged crossbands, more plainly defined than those of other varieties of copperheads. Snakes of this subspecies sometimes reach a length of three feet but most adults are about two feet long. It is the lightest general color of any of the copperhead family and the variety most often seen in Callahan and adjoining counties. Some local residents claim, however, that the Northern copperhead — slightly darker and generally a fraction larger — are also present in this area in smaller numbers. Copperheads do most of their feeding at night. During the spring in some parts of the state, they are found in large numbers along streams and other moist areas, where they spend most of the day hidden beneath decaying logs and other debris which affords good cover. Copperheads also can be expected when air temperatures are high, and when the soil and vegetation are wet from recent rain. They often make their homes within the suburbs of cities where, due to their nocturnal habits and protective coloration, they are apt to be overlooked.

Not quick to seek cover when approached, copperheads prefer to lie perfectly still until an intruder has passed. Once molested, they frequently vibrate their tails and if among dry leaves, produce a buzzing sound not unlike that made by a rattlesnake. Copperheads are quick to strike at annoying objects, and often bite several times in rapid succession.

Copperheads seldom deliver a fatal bite because of their short fangs and small size. Their strike is often blocked by a mere trouser leg. Records of the Antivenin Institute of America show that during a 10-year period, not a single death resulted from 308 recorded copperhead bites regardless of the lack of treatment given victims. In spite of these reassuring figures, it must be remembered that the copperhead is potentially a dangerous snake, especially when the bite involves a child.

Only one kind of Cottonmouth is found in Texas. When viewed from above its head appears triangular shape and from the side the head looks flat on top. It is the most variable poisonous snake in Texas, both in color and markings. Adults are much less brilliantly marked than are the young or newborn snakes. Adults have a background of dark brown and are marked with 10 to 15 crossbands. The bands which have irregular edges, become a little wider along the sides. However, not all Cottonmouths look like this. While some have clearly defined cross-bands, others have none. There is also considerable variation in color. Some Cottonmouths are brown; some are olive brown or olive green; and some are entirely black. This heavy-bodied snake reaches a maximum length of about four and a half or five feet, but the average is more nearly three feet.

More than one-half of all the poisonous kinds of snakes known in Texas are rattlesnakes, and records show that almost every county has at least one variety. Texas rattlesnakes range in size from the very small, 18-inch western pigmy rattlesnake, which rarely if ever causes death among humans, to the seven-foot western diamondback rattlesnake, known to be one of the most dangerous snakes in North America. All have comparatively stout bodies, facial pits characteristic of the family, and rattles.

The rattle, which sets this snake apart, is a series of loosely interlocking horny segments which, when vibrated, produce a sharp buzzing sound as the segments strike against one another. A rattlesnake's age cannot be determined by the number of segments of its rattle because a new segment is added with each shedding of the skin. Because a snake may shed several times a year, the resulting number of segments added annually may be six or more. On the other hand, the segments are frequently broken off at the rattle becomes caught in underbrush, so that few rattlesnakes have a complete rattle.

Texas Game & Fish Commission reports 10 distinct types of rattlesnakes in various parts of the state, five of which are believed to be present in the Callahan, Coleman, Brown and Eastland County area.

Most common variety of rattler in this locality is the Diamondback. This is the most dangerous and at the same time, the most common poisonous snake in the state. Therefore, it is one which all Texas outdoorsmen should be able to recognize on sight. A summary of snake bite cases in the United States over a 10-year period shows that more people died from bites of this species than from bites of any other North American snake. There are several reasons why this snake is responsible for so many bites and such a high number of deaths. Chief among these is its large size. It ranks as one of the two largest poisonous snakes in the country, being second only to the eight-foot eastern diamondback rattlesnake of the southeastern states. In direct proportion to its size, it has long fangs and poison glands which hold a great amount of venom. These factors insure a long strike and deep fang penetration. In addition, it has an unusually furious disposition and, if threatened with danger or sufficiently annoyed, will vigorously defend itself instead of seeking immediate escape.

Although strictly a land snake, the diamondback may sometimes be found crossing streams or ponds and, occasionally, individuals will venture out into lakes and bays.

There are four other varieties of rattlesnakes known to inhabit either this or adjoining counties. Characteristics of the reptiles are similar to those of the diamondback and bites of any are to be regarded as potentially fatal.

Texas Game & Fish Commission reports one other type of poisonous snake in much of Texas. It is the coral snake, not yet reported to have been found in Callahan and adjoining counties. It has been seen near Brady, however, and is thought migrating northward. The coral snake is usually about two feet long and is the most colorful venomous snake in Texas. Yet it is the least dangerous in appearance. Its small, narrow head, slender body and brightly colored pattern can be dangerously misleading. Children, especially, are inclined to pick it up because they are attracted by its colors and convinced that such beauty must be harmless. The pattern consists of red, yellow and black rings which encircle the body in the following order: a broad black ring, a much narrower yellow ring, a broad red ring, a narrow yellow ring, a broad black ring, and so on. Note that the red and yellow rings on the body touch one another. The snout is black and a broad yellow ring crosses the back of the head. The coral is the only poisonous snake in Texas which lays eggs.

It is important that every snake bite victim receive first aid treatment as soon as possible. The patient should not exert himself by running or exercise, because increased circulation brought on by such physical activity will speed up absorption of the poison. For the same reason, the use of whiskey or other stimulants should be avoided.

The victim's state of mind is important; he must be promptly convinced that his chances for recovery are good—and, indeed, they are. He should not be terrified by the thought that every snake bite means certain death. Actually, a survey of case histories shows that with prompt and proper treatment, only about one or two per cent of all snake bites in the country are fatal.

The following five steps are recommended in a pamphlet published by the Texas Game & Fish Commission for the treatment of snake bite victims:

1. Immobilize the affected leg or arm whenever possible. When this is not possible, keep movement at the minimum.
2. Apply a constricting band from two to four inches above the bite, between the wound and the heart. The constricting band, or tourniquet, should be loosened every 15 minutes for an interval of about two minutes. This is a precaution to prevent gangrene.
3. Make incisions after sterilizing the cutting instrument and the bite area with iodine or alcohol. If no antiseptic is available, the blade of the cutting instrument can be sterilized by holding it over a flame (a match will do). Make one cut over each fang mark parallel with the long axis of the bitten limb, not across it. Incisions should be one-quarter inch long and one-eighth to one-quarter inch deep, but definitely no longer than the diameter of the suction apparatus being used. This would allow air to enter the suction bulb from the outside and the device would then be unable to work. Incisions are of the utmost importance to first aid treatment; without them little or no poison can be withdrawn from the wound by suction. However, making even a small incision involves some risk and this operation should be done with considerable care. Improper or carelessly applied first aid may actually do more harm than good. Although a physician may later decide to make additional incisions to relieve the pressure of swelling, only the cuts over the fang marks are recommended for first aid.

4. Apply suction to the cuts. This can best be done with one of the suction devices manufactured for that purpose but, if none is available, suction can be applied by mouth. There is little danger in oral suction unless the lips or inside of the mouth have cuts or abrasions. Contrary to popular opinion, a tooth cavity will not permit passage of venom into the blood. Moreover, snake venom is destroyed by the stomach's digestive juices, so if some is accidentally swallowed, there is little need to worry if you have a healthy system. Only during the first 30 minutes following the bite can much venom be removed by incision and suction.

5. Get to medical aid as soon as possible — but keep in mind that unnecessary physical exertion is harmful.
