THE FINNEY CHRONICLES: Part I

Tahoka Man Has Done Just About Everything

(This is the first of a four-part series on C. Edmund Finney, retired Tahoka photographer who, at the request of this newspaper, sat down before a tape recorder for several hours and related some of his recollections of events and people he was involved with during a long and fascinating career in a wide variety of occupations.)

By DALTON WOOD

Usually when writers of newspaper articles refer to someone in a story, they give them some kind of label relating to that person's present or past activity or vocation. In other words, the subject will be labeled a prizefighter, mechanic, photographer, lawman, deep-sea diver, tennis player, movie actor, rabbit raiser, onion grower, broncbuster, bellhop, fireman or whatever.

C. Edmund Finney of Tahoka could be labeled any or all of those things, including the whatever, because over the years he has been all of them, and more, as he has lived a varied and adventuresome life to its fullest, with enthusiasm and the willingness to try just about anything at least once.

Finney, who will be 85 May 24, has been recognized throughout the area as an expert professional photographer of the highest standards since he came to Tahoka in 1957. He closed out his photography business a few years ago, but his recollections of past activities also include many remarkable events outside the field of photography.

He tells of sparring in the ring with Jack Dempsey ("his manager stopped it, because he was afraid his fighter would get hurt"); of taking pictures of Marilyn Monroe, including a nude setting ("she was much maligned, but she really was a nice, sweet person"); of playing tennis against Bill Tilden ("I read years later that he was a homosexual, and if I'd known that, I probably wouldn't have played tennis against him") and of knowing movie stars ("Vic Mature one night talked me into enlisting for unpaid service in the Coast Guard").

1953 fire at home "burnt the whole thing"

Unfortunately, Finney has no documentary evidence of his associations with the famous over the years. Except for a few items that were stored in a barn, all photographs, negatives and equipment were lost in a fire in 1953, when the Finneys lived near Victorville, Calif., and a fire destroyed their new home. "It burnt the whole thing," he said.

Conversations with several longtime Tahoka residents who have known Finney since he first came here reveal that he has a reputation as a masterful teller of fascinating stories who has kept many listeners spellbound talking of events and people he remembers from the past. One young businessman said that as a boy "I used to sit and listen to Mr. Finney for hours at a time." He added that Finney has often demonstrated brilliant ingenuity in such areas as electronics and other fields and he and others contacted agreed that Finney is a man respected for his extensive knowledge of a wide range of subjects.

Finney recently was interviewed about events which he has been a part of from the time he was a boy in Arizona to the present day. His recollections on many of these things are quoted here, along with some of his commentaries on the American way of life, past and present, including some bouquets for Tahoka, the town he obviously appreciates for its life style.

Finney was born May 24, 1901, "on the side of a mountain in northern Arizona, Conconino County, outside of Williams, Ariz." in a log cabin with a dirt floor and just one big room, with a big fireplace at one end. "My grandmother cooked on big pots. My father was a teamster; he moonlighted buying cattle and horses."

"My father's people were missionaries"

He said his mother, who had been born in Missouri, came with her parents to Arizona by wagon train. Her father had been a Union soldier and in Arizona was engineer for a lumber company ("everything was run by steam"). Finney's mother (who later was Johanna Frederica Fudge when she lived with Mr. and Mrs. Finney in Tahoka for several years before she died) met Finney's father in Williams and they were married ("I think it was in Prescott, Ariz.") when she was only 21.

Finney said his father was often gone for long periods of time buying horses, so his mother lived with her parents, and that's where Finney was born.

"My father's people were missionaries. They were a puritanical breed who went all over the west saving souls...my father was a religious fanatic. He ran away from home when he was seven and stowed away on a wagon train and wound up in Williams." Finney said he had two brothers, Frank, now deceased, and Harold, who lives in Newport Beach, Calif.

"We were back and forth living in Arizona. I had an uncle, Charley Kirsch, now deceased, who was the original owner of the Crossed T's Ranch three or four miles from the Grand Canyon. It's still there; now it's a big dude ranch." Finney said he worked on that ranch as a boy of 11 or 12 and that in the winter it was especially hard work. "In that country when it snowed, cattle would drift in front of the snow. They'd walk right off the cliff. So when it snowed, we'd be in the saddle all day." He added that he attended public schools, but did not go on to college.

Finney said his father was once in partnership with a man who later became president of the Studebaker Corp. "His name escapes me right now, but he and my father had a big livery stable together and he wanted my father to go into the automobile business with him, but the old man wouldn't do it. He said 'those things won't ever last'...but this guy later became an adviser to Hoover."

"My mother and father were divorced when I was a teenager. My mother was uneducated, but was a very shrewd, hard-working woman, and she took us three kids and moved to wherever she could get work, sort of like I did later on." He added that they lived in Phoenix for two or three years and later moved to Los Angeles and then to Watts, Calif.

Finney said the first job he ever had that he was supposed to have been paid for was washing dishes at a camp near Chandler, Ariz., around 1915. "The Goodyear Land and Cotton Co. was leveling land, using Indian workers operating Fresno scrapers, and I worked there (washing dishes) for about three weeks and never did get paid, so I left.

"My next job was a bellhop in the Adams Hotel in Phoenix. It was a real learning experience for an uncultured young man. I was thrown into a cosmopolitan atmosphere. I remember how surprised I was at how the other people lived. I learned about women and drinking and everything else right there in that hotel."

Finney recalled that the governor of Arizona at that time sometimes stayed at the Adams and that the governor once sent him to Yuma to get some whiskey to be used by the governor and some of his special friends. Arizona at that time had only been in the union a few years and it was a dry state. Finney said the governor told him to keep the whiskey in a vault and charge $20 a bottle for it when certain well-known people came to the hotel.

"His name was Harold Bell Wright, and he wrote books"

"The whiskey cost about a dollar and a quarter. I cannot remember the governor's name...I can only remember one name from that period in Arizona—he was a newspaperman, by the way. His name was Harold Bell Wright, and he wrote books. He would sit up on the mezzanine floor and read poetry to this woman. I remember he would give me a silver dollar every time I brought something up to him."

Harold Bell Wright was author of several well-known books, including "The Winning of Barbara Worth" and "The Shepherd of the Hills," which is the basis of an outdoor theater production now presented each summer at Branson, Mo.

Phoenix still has an Adams Hotel, said Finney, but the original hotel was demolished and a new one built. The old Adams Hotel was the center of all social life in Arizona in the early days, he said.

"I was first introduced to the movie business in the hotel," Finney mused. He said a troupe of movie people came to the Adams, and that the director was a man named Ford, who later made "Ruggles of Red Gap." It was in 1915 or 1916 and they were making a silent movie.

"They kept pretty much to themselves. I remember it was the first time I ever saw a woman undressed. They played strip poker and I would take things up to them, and I was just like a piece of the furniture to them."

In those days in Arizona, the young bellhop would spend much of his time in the Phoenix library reading when he was off duty. This reading, he said, contributed much to his education and knowledge on a wide range of topics.

"Probably my first interest in photography came from an old man—old? Well, he probably was about 40—who came to the Adams Hotel when I was a bellhop there. His name was Hutchinson and he came from Los Angeles. The hotel would let me take a leave of absence and this Hutchinson had a circuit camera and we'd go out to Jerome, Ariz., and different places where they had mines and take pictures. Those cameras are a clockwork deal, and the camera turns, with just a slit behind the lens." He explained that this was the kind of camera used in early days to take large crowds of people and still have all the faces and everything else in focus, like the wide crowd pictures which used to be seen in barber shops.

Finney said he moved with his mother and two brothers to Los Angeles and then seven miles to Watts, Calif., which at that time was not a part of Los Angeles, although it was annexed while the Finneys lived there. In those days, any kind of work was welcome, and Finney said he used to get up at 4 a.m. and go down to the pool hall in Watts. "We'd play pool and line up outside the place for any job in the construction business. One day I'd be a hod carrier, the next day something else; we got paid by the day we worked."

"I got five bucks for boxing with Jack Dempsey"

The owner of the pool hall was a boxing fanatic who built a 16-foot boxing ring, and Finney said he and others could pick up four or five dollars sparring. "Any of those boxers who came in there, I'd spar with them for three rounds for five bucks. I never did have one of them deck me...I got five bucks for boxing with Jack Dempsey one time. He wasn't champion yet. He had come to Los Angeles to fight a benefit bout at the Los Angeles Athletic Club...I don't know how he got down to Watts, but he showed up... His manager stopped it in the second round; he was afraid I was going to hurt his fighter. He (Dempsey) was a rough, tough man, a killer, but I knew exactly how he fought; you see, I had seen him fight. He used an uppercut and you could tie him up if you were a good boxer. He never did hurt me. I was pretty strong in those days."

Finney also remembers that the pool hall manager "used to get his violin out and play it while the fight was going on."

During the interview, Finney took time out from his narratives to comment occasionally on life in general and voiced some definite opinions about some aspects of society. After telling of doing various construction jobs in his younger days in Watts, he remarked:

"I never was able to be happy sitting at a desk. Construction work was hard, but you could still remain an individual." He then commented on current ways of doing things, saying that people "who live in this day and age are 'certs'—they get up at a certain time, they rush around and do the same things every day and spend hours and hours sitting before a computer." He said that Lubbock General Hospital and the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center, where he and his wife have had to go on occasion, "is one of the most horrible examples... there's this long corridor lined up with cubicles on each side, reminds me of a song sometime back about all the little boxes in a row...all these little boxes and somebody sits in each one of them with a computer. I think this is the most horrible way to live I've ever encountered; I don't think any black slave ever had it as bad as that."

Finney said he took pictures of all the seniors at Tahoka High School for about 20 years. "I used to encourage these kids from the poorer families to do whatever they could to get through college. I used to tell them they could do it, if they'd just try hard enough." It was good advice, from a man who always has been eager to tackle seemingly impossible jobs.

"Tahoka is a wonderful place to live"

"I've always been amazed at the incredible stupidity of some of our congressmen and legislators...Tahoka has been very lucky; we don't have too much interference...one of the star attractions of living in Tahoka is that we don't have any police interference in our lives." Finney added:

"I think Tahoka is a wonderful place to live. Our younger people don't believe that, but as an old man, it's absolutely marvelous. It's more civilized than New York or Chicago or Los Angeles or any of the other sophisticated cities."

MRS. DALE CLEM nee Julie Latham

Julie Latham - Dale Clem Exchange Double Ring Vows In New Home

Julie Latham became the bride of Dale Clem at 6 p.m. Saturday, March 8, in the New Home Baptist Church with Rev. Leo Cole of New Home officiating the double ring ceremony. Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Mack Dozier and Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Clem, all of New Home. The altar was decorated with brass candelabras designed and assembled by the groom's father, Bob Clem. They held pink and blue candles and greenery. The altar was decked with brass baskets filled with pink and blue day lilies and white roses with a touch of greenery. Jennifer Shaw, sister of the bride, and Clay Jacobs began the ceremony by singing "endless Love", with Jacobs accompanying at the piano. Given in marriage by her stepfather, the bride wore a formal length gown of white organza fashioned with a Queen Anne neckline edged in chantilly lace. The empire bodice had an overlay of chantilly lace and seed pearls. The full bishop sleeves were of lace. The skirt featured three tiers edged in chantilly lace which flowed into a chapel length train. Her fingertip veil of illusion was gathered to a headband.

The bride's bouquet was a cascade of pink and blue day lilies and roses surrounded by baby's breath and pink and blue ribbon and bows.

She wore a strand of pearls belonging to her mother as something old, something borrowed was her sister-in-law's wedding dress.

Jennifer Shaw, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and bridesmaids were Sheryl Wilke and Yevett Sanders, both of Lubbock.

The brides attendants wore tea length gowns of pink moire taffeta fashioned with puff sleeves and empire bodice. They carried a light bouquet of pink day lilies tied with matching ribbon. The dresses were made by Julie Gill.

Amy Clem and Brooke Fillingim, nieces of the groom, were flower girls. They wore dresses of pink taffeta with drop waists and double tier skirts accented by a wide sash and bow. The dresses were made by the groom's grandmother, Mrs. Adrian Evans.

Ross Fillingim, nephew of the groom, was ringbearer. He wore a navy tweed suit.

Best man was Ricky Clem, brother of the groom. Groomsman were Scott McAllister and Kent Burton, all of New Home.

Alan Nettles and Tommy Harmonson were candlelighters and also served as ushers along with Andy Bill Fillingim, brother-in-law of the groom, and Dahlen Hancock, all of New Home. Organist was Gary White of Tahoka.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the fellowship hall of the church. Tricia Wyatt presided at the registry table.

Sherry Nettles, Lessia Clem, sister-in-law of the groom, Mitzi Bruton, Georga Clem, cousin of the groom, Judi Fillingim, sister of the groom, all served at the bride's and groom's tables.

Planter Boxes Stolen From Farm In County

Six planter boxes were stolen from a location northwest of New Home on FM 179 sometime during the last two months, owner Joe Gordon of Abernathy reported. Crime Line is offering a $300 reward in the case.

Two young men reported to officers this week that they had bought a Honda motorcycle from an unknown man near Wilson March 2, paying $80 on an agreed price of $250. They said the man never came to get the rest of the money, and after reading in the Lynn County News about theft of a motorcycle, they brought it in, and it was identified as one which had been stolen March 2 from Danny Orr, Rt. 5, Tahoka. The cycle was returned to the owner.

Police investigated an accident at South 1st and Ave. N on Monday that involved a 1978 GMC pickup driven by Eddy Saldana of Tahoka and a late model Ford pickup driven by George Glenn of Tahoka. No injuries were reported.

An accident was investigated on Friday, March 7 at the intersection of 2300 Main and N. 7th that involved a 1984 Ford driven by Maria Bernal Antu of Tahoka and a 1981 Chevrolet pickup driven by Russell Wayne Cook of Tahoka. No injuries were reported.

Police arrested a Tahoka young man on Friday for DWI and he was also charged with juvenile criminal mischief and was turned over to juvenile authorities in Lubbock for observation.

Police also made one arrest for public intoxication during the past week.

Tickets issued during the past week include three for no driver's license, two for speeding, two for exhibition of acceleration and one ticket each for failure to yield right of way resulting in an accident, failure to yield at stop intersection, operating a vehicle without license plates and one ticket for driving on wrong side of a roadway.

In jail during the week were four persons for public intoxication and one each for driving while license suspended, forgery by passing, burglary of a building, theft by check, DWI and traffic, disorderly conduct and desertion from the U.S. Marine Corps.

Analyses Of 1986 Farm Program Alternatives Set

Alternatives (example: 75-25 or 50-50) of the 1986 farm bill will be discussed in an open working session Wednesday, March 19, beginning at 1 p.m. in the meeting room of Lyntegar Electric Cooperative in Tahoka.

Dr. Jackie Smith will be present to discuss the choices and computers will be available to help analyze your particular farming operation.

Worksheets designed to fit the computer program are available at the county Extension agents office before the meeting. These worksheets will allow you to collect data before the meeting in order to better facilitate your decisions or opportunity.

PCG Director To Be Elected

Lynn County cotton producers and agribusinessmen will elect a Businessman Director to Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. at a 7 p.m. meeting Monday, March 17, in the community room of the First National Bank, Tahoka.

Announcement of the election comes from Wayne Huffaker of Tahoka, Lynn County Producer Director to the 25-county cotton organization, and Joe D. Unfried of New Home, current Businessman Director.

A PCG staff member will conduct the election, discuss the new 1986 cotton program and review and answer questions about recent and planned PCG activities.

The phrase "minutes of a meeting" does not refer to the time. It stems from the Latin "minutus" meaning "small", since records of proceedings were generally taken down in miniature, to be transcribed later.

Bond Nursery of Lamesa planted this tree and also a Youpon Holly Tree in the adjacent rock park in honor of the Sesquicentennial, plus several Pinon pines. A brief ceremony was conducted Thursday by the Garden Club, led by Mrs. Clifford Tankersley. (LYNN COUNTY NEWS PHOTO)

FARMERS' HEALTH
Many farmers risk their eyesight every Spring as they plow anhydrous ammonia into their fields without proper eye protection. As most accidents occur while connecting hoses or adjusting valves, a wise farmer will wear goggles at these times. Inhaling too much ammonia can cause a pneumonia-like condition.
