Miss Hawkins, Carpenter Repeat Doublerings Vows

MR. AND MRS. CURTIS CARPENTER
(nee Shelli Hawkins)

Miss Shelli Kay Hawkins became the bride of Curtis Lynn Carpenter in a candlelight ceremony at 7:30 p.m. February 26 in the First United Methodist Church. Bob Dodd read the double ring vows.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Hawkins. Carpenter is the son of Betty Carpenter of Muleshoe and Jimmie Carpenter of Electra.

The church was decorated with a white fan candelabra behind the altar and two white spiral candelabras provided a focus point on each side. Greenery was entwined on the candelabras.

Providing the traditional march and recessional on the organ was Ann Sower. Vocal selections by Cheryl Karr of Seagraves, cousin of the bride, included "Through the Eyes of Love" and "Surround Me With Love" before the bride entered. During the ceremony, she sang, "The Wedding Song" ("There is Love.")

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an A-line chapel length dress covered with white chantilly lace featuring a high neckline and a yoke at the top with bishop sleeves of lace. The dress was in three tiers with ruffles of lace with ribbon running through it.

Her fingertip veil was attached to a Juliet cap covered with Chantilly lace and ribbon along the edge to match the dress.

The bride carried a bouquet of burgundy and pink silk roses, small carnations and baby's breath, with satin ribbon streamers tied in love knots.

In keeping the tradition, the bride carried a handkerchief belonging to her great grandmother, for something old; her dress as something new. Something borrowed was her mother's diamond ring and something blue was the traditional garter.

Serving as maid of honor was Sharla (Charli) Hawkins, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids were Sharon Carpenter, sister of the groom, and Brenda Hawkins, sister in law of the bride. They were attired in burgundy chiffon dresses with ruffles over the shoulder and ruffles at the hemline, tied up on one side.

They carried round bouquets of white and burgundy rosebuds and pink carnations.

Flower girls were Brandi Carpenter and Heather Durr, nieces of the groom. They wore pink chiffon dresses with ruffles on the shoulders and around the hemline with a satin ribbon tie.

They carried baskets with white and burgundy bows tied on the sides.

Miss Michelle Agee presided over the registry table.

Serving as best man was Curtis Elder. Groomsmen were Doug Precure and Brent Gunter. Ushers were Keith Hawkins and Kirk Lewis.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the fellowship hall of the church. Serving at the bride's table were Joie Carpenter and Laverne Durr, sisters of the groom. Mrs. Dusty Precure served at the groom's table.

Members of the Houseparty included Janelle Turner, Mary Janice Brantley, Donna Black, Sandy Turner, Joyce Bucks, Neelie Moore and Alma Crim.

Following a wedding trip to Ruidoso, N. M. the couple are making their home in Muleshoe, where the groom is employed at Baker Farm Supply.

A birthday once a year is enough.

Speeding is profitable only for the undertakers.

This year, many people will buy more ceiling fans for homes and businesses, and from all expectations, they'll make a big difference in energy savings for spring and summer. Families will be setting thermostats from 76-80 and turning on the fans -- to find they're still comfortable and have air-conditioning savings of from 18-25 percent. Houston Lighting and Power Company says the best reason for a fan is money. They say a one-ton air conditioner costs about 10 cents per hour to operate.

A fan costs less than a penny per hour to operate. You don't have to be a whiz in math to figure the difference -- 10 hours of one or the other can add up to either a dollar or a dime. Of course, fans don't actually lower room temperature, but the constant breeze makes you feel cooler.

For greatest savings, check on installation cost. Cost of having a ceiling fan installed can sometimes run as much as the actual cost of the fan, so be sure to consider this before buying. Some fans have only a few instructions on installation, but others are complete with pictures, so it's possible to install a fan yourself. Be sure to pick up instructions when you buy the fans, and read them carefully.

Manufacturers will tell you if fans can be installed on ceilings as low as eight feet. They usually say mount the fan to a standard three or four inch junction box securely anchored to support 45 pounds. A ceiling fixture already in place is the easiest place to hang a ceiling fan. This gives you ready access to electricity and puts you near a ceiling joist, since the ceiling box (the metal box up in the ceiling that contains the electrical wiring) is attached to a joist. Another way to hang the fan simply involves placing a new ceiling box to the underside of a joist and running power to it.

In most cities, however, residents should know that a permit is necessary (and these are issued only to licensed electricians) for all but very simple home wiring. So have a professional do the electrical part and save yourself a possible injurious shock and/or a fine. A third way to get power to the fan is to hang the fan as if it were a swag lamp, draping the power cord through a chain to the nearest wall, then down the wall to a plug. There are swag kits available for this purpose.

In deciding which way to go, remember that the first method mentioned really is the easiest way -- using an existing ceiling fixture. With this method, the competent do-it-yourselfer can easily install a ceiling fan in an hour or two.

When should the "bare look" begin? It begins at planting time and continues forever. The longer grass is allowed to grow under fruit trees, the greater the reduction of new growth and future crops.

In fact, weeds and grass around trees decrease growth for several years. For instance, if tree growth is reduced by 20 percent for one year because of grass competition, growth is automatically reduced 20 percent during the second year's growth. Grass competition can reduce growth by as much as 50 percent.

If you don't like the bare look, mulching can be beneficial. Spreading organic materials such as leaves, grass clippings or straw under and around fruit trees effectively controls grass and weeds while at the same time providing an attractive appearance.

Not only does mulching with organic materials prevent grass competition, but it also conserves moisture for tree root use and stabilizes soil temperatures (roots do not like extremely hot or cold soils). Provide a three to four inch thick mulch at least three feet wide around young trees throughout the growing season.

If trees are closely surrounded by tenacious grasses such as bermuda, remove the turf by hand or use a recommended herbicide.

Liberal watering can offset the retarding effect of grass. Proper watering not only results in more but stronger fruit buds that will survive frosts more successfully. Higher yields and larger fruit sizes will result.

Many small fruits such as strawberries, blackberries, blueberries and figs have shallow root systems, making them susceptible to short drought periods of only two weeks. Drought-stressed plants usually drop fruit or stop growing. Fruit crops require at least one inch of rainfall per week during the growing season for maximum production. Most areas west of Interstate Highway 35 require irrigation of trees during the growing season. Even fruit crops growing in the high rainfall areas of the state benefit from irrigation.

Trees need a deep, thorough soaking once a week during the growing season either from natural rainfall or supplemental irrigation. When irrigating, be thorough and allow water to penetrate deeply. For large trees, let water flow slowly onto an area under the dripline of the tree for several hours. Since large trees require considerable deep watering, irrigation that is adequate for lawn grasses growing under trees is not adequate for an actively growing fruit tree. A good rule of thumb is to water large trees every week by leaving the hose seeping for six to eight hours.

MJHS Spotlights Health Department

Concluding the Spotlight at MJHS is the Health Department. Health is a subject taught at all grade levels in MJHS. Mrs. Pat Gunter and Mrs. Mary Scoggin teach health in conjunction with their sixth and seventh grade science classes. Leslie Soto and Ross Dodson teach eighth grade health.

Mr. Soto commented, "I am very excited about the health program in Junior High this year. The health department is executing many projects to help the students gain an understanding of total health, good nutrition, health diseases, drugs, and drug abuse, first aid procedures and the importance of their environment.

Throughout the school year we will be having guest speakers, films, class projects and reports that will bring information to the students on different areas of health. By doing this the students will get an idea and a realization of what is important to a person's health and what is harmful. An example of this was executed earlier in the school year when officer Holmes from the Muleshoe Police Department came and spoke to the students on drugs and drug abuse. The film he showed was very effective. It activated some very good questions from the students. Another example was accomplished with the help of the American Heart Association. The students were instructed in CPR and artificial resuscitation. The students were tested individually on paper and by actually performing the procedures of CPR and artificial resuscitation on Resuci-Anne.

I believe that by actually involving the students in class projects and labs, this will help individualize the classroom situation and help develop the attitude of the student by giving him a sense of accomplishment. mjh -- sherri's spots

Hello! Monday, March 15, we preregistered for next year. Can you believe it is already that time again?

Professor claims some mine owners may spend too much

COLLEGE STATION — Strip mine owners may be spending thousands of unnecessary dollars in the process of reclaiming some depleted mine sites, says a Texas A&M University landscape architect. Dr. Harlow Landphair, associate professor of landscape architecture, said under the right conditions many strip mined sites will revegetate with a minimum of help from man. Predictions are that a million acres of Texas land will be stripped in the next 40 or 50 years for the lignite coal deposits that lie beneath the surface.

Soil compaction can act as an unseen enemy to farmers and reduce crop production. Commonly called "hardpan", compacted soil can literally "choke off" plant roots so that they're unable to get water or nutrients. "Probably the most evident plant symptom of compacted soil is a shallow root system," says Dr. Ed Colburn, agronomist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. "Plant roots may be unable to penetrate a severely compacted soil and may grow horizontally, resulting in what some farmers call 'crow foot' in such crops as cotton that have a tap root."

Along with stunting plant roots, soil compaction may affect seed germination, seedling emergence and other phases of crop growth and production, says Colburn.

Poor stands, poor plant growth, discolored plant leaves and premature wilting may signal problems due to compacted soil, notes the agronomist. However, many of these same symptoms can also be due to dry weather, nutrient deficiencies and other factors.

"Excessive soil compaction also reduces water penetration and increases run-off and soil erosion," adds Colburn. "Water standing in a field may signal a soil compaction problem since water infiltration is slow in a hardpan area."

"The best way to identify a hardpan is to dig a hole at least three feet deep and look for crop roots in the subsoil," explains Colburn. "If roots have penetrated the subsoil, then the next crop should also be able to move to that depth."

A farmer can also use a sharp rod or soil probe to check for hardpans, says the agronomist. You should be able to push the rod into the soil at a fairly constant rate until compacted soil is reached. The average person will have trouble pushing the rod through a hardpan. What causes soil compaction?

"Some soils are naturally compact, especially subsoil material," explains Colburn. "Excessive tillage, which reduces the size of soil granules, and tillage or other field operations when soil is wet are two major causes of soil compaction."

In fact, any machinery operation results in soil compaction, notes the agronomist, whether it's planting, cultivating, fertilizing or harvesting. "Farmers should limit the use of heavy equipment and the number of tillage operations to those required to keep soil productive," recommended Colburn. "Avoid tillage if it does not improve soil physical conditions, promote water infiltration and aeration, help weed control, incorporate crop residues into the soil, prepare a seedbed, or help control wind and water erosion."

Overseas Shipments Brisk

Cotton export shipments during the week ended March 11 totaled 201,300 running bales. This has brought accumulated shipments for the season to 3,736,000.

Gross new sales of 64,900 included 21,800 to Canada, 7,900 to South Korea, 7,100 to Japan, and 6,100 to Indonesia. The net sales increase was reduced to 34,300 after cancellations, which included transfers of 27,000 to 1982-83 marketing year.

Korea May Buy More Cotton

Spinners and Weavers Association of Korea delegation has requested an additional $100 million in GSM-102 loan guarantees for purchase of U. S. cotton this year.

Korea buys about 1.4 million bales of U.S. cotton annually and expects to increase its purchases to 1.7 million bales this year.

Request for additional loan guarantees was made during a meeting between Korean group, Agriculture Secretary John Block, and other government officials. Robert H. Squires, of Lubbock, Texas, chairman of Cotton Council International, and CCI staff members accompanied delegation.

Paul A. Volcker, Federal Reserve Chairman:

"Too much of the energy of our citizens was directed toward seeking protection from future price increases and toward speculative activity, and too little toward production."

LUBBOCK, Friday, March 5, 1982

Officials of Plains Cotton Growers, Inc., Lubbock, have fixed April 21 as the date for the 25-county cotton producer organization's annual meeting, to be held in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center. The exact time of the meeting will be announced later.

According to PCG Executive Vice President Donald Johnson, central topic of the meeting will be the classing of cotton by instruments, referred to in the industry as "HVI," the acronym for High Volume Instrumentation. "Interest in HVI among producers, textile manufacturers and cotton merchandisers is growing by leaps and bounds," Johnson notes, "which we think makes it a very timely topic for our annual membership meeting."

HVI discussion among High Plains producers in recent months, Johnson continues, has been stimulated further by widespread dissatisfaction with manual classing results on much of the 1981 crop. "And one of the issues to be faced at our meeting is whether HVI can be expected to answer all or any of the complaints producers have against traditional classing methods."

Speakers for the annual PCG gathering have not been named, but are being chosen to address all aspects of HVI.

Plans call for an official of the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Marketing Service, which is responsible for cotton classing operations, to discuss USDA's position with regard to converting classing offices to HVI, including possible sources of funds to cover the cost of such conversion.

Also on the program, Johnson says, will be a speaker from a textile mill where cotton is being evaluated by instruments as a means to improve the predictability of end product quality.

A growing number of mills are using instruments and are pleased with the results, Johnson points out, which is an indication that making instrument data available to mills before they buy their cotton could be a valuable marketing tool for producers.

"However there is always the question of whether the market pricing system will properly reward producers for providing additional quality information," he says, "and this is another concern we will be asking our speakers to address."

In fact, Johnson concludes, we expect to get speakers who will focus on all of the advantages and possible disadvantages producers might expect from HVI.

Public Service Announcement From Bailey County Appraisal and State Property Tax Board

Homeowners who are 65 years of age or older and failed to receive their school district homestead exemptions in 1979 have until April 1 of this year to do so. In this way, elderly homeowners will be able to take advantage of the tax freeze associated with the $10,000 homestead exemption, said Dale Jones, chief appraiser for the Bailey County Appraisal District.

According to a law passed by the Special Session of the 67th legislature, over-65 homeowners who qualified for the school homestead "tax freeze" in 1979, but did not apply for the limitation, may file an application with the chief appraiser of the appraisal district in which the home is located.

Application must be made with Dale Jones before April 1, 1982. To qualify for their tax limitation, on January 1, 1979 a homeowner must have satisfied these requirements:

- Be 65 years or older
- Own his home
- Use that home as his principal residence

The chief appraiser will consider all applications and notify each applicant before April 15, 1982. If the application is approved, the chief appraiser will make an entry on the appropriate school district's 1982 appraisal records.

This entry will indicate the amount of tax the over-65 taxpayer should have paid in 1979, had he been granted the $5,000 general homestead exemption and the $10,000 over-65 homestead exemption. No refunds of taxes paid will be given for 1979, 1980, or 1981.

For 1982, the taxpayer's amount of homestead taxes paid may not exceed the amount of taxes the school district would have imposed on the homestead for 1979, had the taxpayer been granted his homestead exemptions. This frozen tax amount will remain in effect as long as the homestead remains the same.
