THE CATTLE PLAGUE.

PURILITE AND DANGER OF HALF MEASURES.

Mass has been stated of quarantine is a sufficient answer to the demand for the treatment of the sick. Ruinous in its exproduction and propagation of the poison, it should be prohibited under the heaviest penalties in all countries where the extermination of the disease has been determined on. Germany, Holiand, Belgium, France and England have been treating the victims of this plague for nearly half a century, but the result has only been the increase of disease and death. Our own infected states have been treating it for a third of a century, and he disease has been repeatedly crushed out at small expense, and there can be no doubt as to which is the wisest course. As all the plagues are slike in the propagation of the plagues are slike in the propagation of the poison in the bodies of the sick, I may be allowed to adduce the experience of two adjoint countries in Sootland when invaded by the rinderpest. Aberdeen raised a fund of $20,000, and though she suffered several successive invasions, she speedily crushed out the poison when it appeared by slaughtering the sick beasts and disinfecting the premises. The result was that little more than half of the fund was wanted to reimburse the owners for their losses, and the splendid hereion, the loss of many thousands of cattle and the loss o

Oun legislators, who only rejected the law taxing dogs, will doubtless feel humiliated at the poverty of their genius for devising blessings for the people when they learn that the Tennessee legislature not only sholished the dog tax law but refunded the dog tax already paid. The members of the Tennessee legislature are thus assured of office as long as they live.

A BILL has been introduced in the general assembly of the state of Virginia which makes it felony for any person to use a cowhide or horsewhay for the purpose of assaulting or degrading another, and makes the ponitentiary not exceeding five years nor less than two years.

The perfect iso quarantine is its expense, and makes the summals and brute, can only be secured by a patrol to be kept up day and night. Any such to be they up day and night. DAVY CROCKETT.

great Tennessee hunter determined to 'run for Congress,"

The stump of a tree is frequently the rostrum of a western orator; hence the name of 'stump speeches' has been given in the States to those morsels of eloquence which are seasoned and sauced exclusively for the popular palate. Possessed of robust health and powerful lungs, backed by never-faltering perseverance, Orockett was a giant on the stump. If poor in classical lore he was affluent in the figures and phraseology of life in the West. After a long and arduous struggle, he was chosen a member of Congress for Tennessee.

His career as a patriotic legislator disapstruggle, he was chosen a member of Congress for Tennessee.

His career as a patriotic legislator disappointed his hopes, and fell far short of his electioneering promises. When he entered a Congress he imagined that his provess as a hunter and a wrestler would inspire his opponents with awe, and enable him to shoulder the state wagon out of the ruts by a few prompt and dexirous heaves but he found difficulties at Washington which he never contemplated when an aspirant for representative honors. The first thing, he said, that 'bothered' him were the Congressional rules and orders, and 'what those rascally things were made for he could not reckon, for they did no good." If he happened to damage these rules and orders, and then got in a 'fair track,' his tongue did not wag so glibly as it used to do on the stump, and he frequently found himself short of breath and his knees weak when he attempted to harangue the House. He could not understand this, but he found it was so day after day. He often looked round to see if there were any man bigger and stronger than himself to produce this quaking, for, until then, none but a stronger man than himself could shake his nerve. His visions of reform, one after this time Texas had raised the standard of resistance against military usurpation. To the cause of Texan liberty he resioned to devote himself, and, shouldering his rifle, he started for the Sabine, and arrived at Nacogdoches, accompanied by several volunteers, in the commencement of the war. Having determined to become a citizen of Texas, he proceeded with his companions to the office of Mr. Forbes (then first judge of the municipality), to take the eath of allegiance, which was tendered to him in the following form:

of Texas, the orders and decrees of the cans expect, whether they defeat Judge of Texas—so help me God."

Crockett was not the man to make a solumn declaration without scratinizing its import. He refused to take the oath as tendered, stating that alteough he was willing to swear to support any future Republican government, he could not subscribe his name to this form, as the "future" government might be despotic. Mr. Forbes then inserted the word "republican" between the words "future" and "government," and the instrument was signed. The original, deposited in the office of the war department of Texas, exhibits the interlinestion and the autograph of David Crockett.

Biography is the handmaid of History, and frequently a more agreeable companion than her mistress; I therefore offer no apologo for this brief notice of one of "the heroes of the Alame." Poor David thy simple uprightness merited a happier end! Yet, to becrow a phrase of thine own coinage, thou didst "go a-head for the right;" and thy blood was shed upon a holy attar, and from thy smouldering ashes arose a fame which streamed from the San Antonio to the Missussippi and Ohio, lighting up, in many a generous heart, a fire not to be extinguished, so long as those who dishonored thy manly form continued to tread the soil in which their barbarian vindictiveness denied thee and thy gallant comrades the humble privilege of a soldier's grave.

Died, at the residence of Jas. E. Mosset, in this city, on the 2nd of April, Charles D. O'Comor, late of St. Louis, Mo. He was born in the state of New York on the 20th of November, 1844. Removing to Missouri, he resided in St. Louis a year prior to coming to Texas. About a year ago that insidious and fatal disease, consumption, fastened itself upon him. Encouraged by the experience of others, he came to Texas on the 1st of November last, and for a while he seemed to grow better. But the disease had gone too far; a month ago he began to grow worse, rapidly, and died at 6 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Though far away from his home and kindred, he did not die away from friends. Besides his affectionate young wife, who accompanied him in all his gourneyings, and who was permitted to be at his bedside until the last and receive his pasting words, he was surrounded by many new-made friends, and among the happiest of his life. A few days before his death he sent for the pastor of the Presbyterian church of this city, Rev. J. W. Neil. After a foll and free confession of his sins and a sorsowful recounting of his past implicity, he asked with great carnestness, "What must I do to be saved?" The plan of salvation was explained to him in all its simplicity and freeness. He seemed to have grace given him to lay hold of it, asking the minister if he believed in eleventh hour conversions; he was pointed to the thief on the cross. He then said, "I do believe, and trust Christ for my salvation." He was then baptised, and from that hour seemed to be a new man. Those Christians who were about him all testify to the great change which came upon him. The minister visited him several times before his death, and each time found him brighter, happier and more confident of his safety. His death bed was indeed remarkable. Retaining consciousness to the last, he said, as he closed his eyes, "Asleep in Jesus; I am happy; I want now to die;" and sweetly fell asleep, to wake no more in this world.

Those who saw him die bear witness to the Editors San Antonio Expans:

In looking over the San Antonio Weekly Express, which one of my good friends had the kindness to send me, dated February 27, I saw a piece headed "Sheep Hasbandry—Days' Doings on a Sheep Ranch in Southwest Texas." Now, I am greatly in favor of Texas, and hope I shall see the state before many months. Your correspondent remarks that he had been raked over the coals for his remarks in regard to sheep-rraising, as it might hurt the tide of immigration, but I want to assure him that it will not change one person, provided he be of a sound mind, for I believe his remarks to be true. I believe no man oan be successful in business

The Uvalde Hesperjan makes an unjust attack upon the San Antonio postoffice, two is statements in which we are requested to deny, as they are entirely erroneous. First, the Hesperjan assails the mailing clerk, who is Mr. E. F. Deaton, and charges certain alleged irregularities to his score. Mr. Deaton is regarded by the people of this city as a most efficient and faithful clerk, and the article in question will fail to do him any injury. But what is most seriously objected to in the Hesperjan's publication is an effort to create the impression that a grossly incompotent negro is employed in the office. Let the Uvalde man come down and see us again, and look a little farther into things before he lets his cat jump. Meantime let some country postmasters be more careful in handling the mails.

the meeting of the district court. The thinks the bill appropriating $46,000 to pay debts contracted for the maintainance of Hall's rangers in the field, which passed the house last Wednesday, will go through the Senate without anp trouble. The senate bill appropriating $150,000 for frontier protection is still made a matter for contest in the house, but Mr. Houston decen't seem to doubt its but Mr. Houston doesn't seem to doubt its passage. The bill to purchase the Alamo, Mr. Houston says, is askeep in the house, which body seems to have its hands full. Some members of the house talk of adjourning on the 15th, but it is not likely to do so before the 30th.

The case of the city against Mr. R. G.
Nixon, charged with violating the city ordinance regulating the construction of dams in the river, was tried yesterday before the recorder and a verdict of not guilty rendered by the jury. The point was made in the trial that the detendant had only improved upon a dam which the city had paid for the construction of to render the Abat crossing more passable. The question of regulating the construction of dams in the river seems to be an awkward one for the city council, which body anticipates the passage of an ordinance ordering the removal of all dams within certain limits,

The Galveston Civilian asserts that Lieutenant Lee Hall can lay his hands on the runaway Galveston bank cashier Reed at a moment's notice, but does not choose to do so unless remunerated. The Civilian hints that no effort has been made to pursue Reed or "nab him," and that Reed has permitted himself to be used to shield others. The same paper intimates that there is a settled belief in the public mind the First National bank of Galveston, with which Reed was connected, is not as solvent as it might be, and adds that the government has sent an agent down to look into its affairs.
