Water Board To Hawkins Rule On Permits

The testimony ending the hail suppression controversy was over after two days. The effects of hail suppression on area clouds ended here Thursday with down-to-earth testimony by farmers on both sides of the question. Within 60 days the Texas Water Development Board will rule on permit applications by two companies seeking to modify weather over the South Plains.

No matter which way it goes, it is possible that the issue may still wind up in court. Jerfy Kirby, representing Atmospherics Inc. and Plains Weather Improvement Assn. Inc. was happy at the conclusion of the two-day hearing Thursday.

Bailey County famers who anticipate putting in new irrigation wells are faced with a problem. This being the fact that there won't be enough electrical power to supply their needs, or in the case of gasoline powered pumps, gas company transmission lines in some areas are now loaded to capacity.

J.W. Coppedge, Manager of Bailey County Electric Cooperative stated that "for the first time in history we have to limit our sale of power under certain conditions, primarily to irrigation pumping loads in excess to 15 horse power.'

"The reason for this is our growth has been limited because of the lack of facilities of the power supplier to serve our needs during this critical energy situation we are now facing." Coppedge said. He pointed out that, "based on information we have received, growth is limited to six percent per year for new construction of generating and transmission systems." Coppedge explained, "For the time, we have had to restrict service and are just doing it during the peak summer load. We have had tremendous demands because of the gas situation.'

Coppedge pointed out that this company has been making improvements in their system for the past several years and have been building as fast as they could.

"We will still take care of our customers," said Coppedge, 'eccept for the irrigation load.' Bailey County Electric Cooperative is still taking applications, but does not expect to be able to serve them until after August when the peak season is over.

"Due to the fact that there are some different type loads we expect to serve, we urge anyone who anticipates buying, to check with us before they invest too much," Coppedge said.

"The problem is just a matter of not having enough power to go around," explained Coppedge. "We fully intend to be in a position to take care of everyone's needs, but we have to do it on a schedule of our wholesale power supply. Again we urge anyone in our operating area who is planning to put in irrigation to contact us before they spend a lot of money," said Cont. on Page 2, Col 3

In two public hearings earlier this year and on the basis of evidence presented during the adjudicatior hearing, it is possibie that the board, on the strength of resentment could grant permits, but only for one year.

Basically, the quarrel is between dryland farmer and farmers with irrigated property. The dryland farmers feel hail suppression efforts reduce rainfall, while the other camp voluntarily contributes funds to fight cropdestroying hail.

James Welch, president of Better Weather Inc., the farmers' group which contracts with Atmospherics, said he would be willing to abide by election results in Castro County, where he farms, when he was questioned by Browder.

Thursday afternoon, after the two companies rested their case, the protesters called eight witnesses, all area farmers. Almost all of the farmers said they had seen weather modifications planes breaking up clouds which, in their judgement would have brought rain if left Ross Lumsden, owning a gin a half mile from the Littlfield Airport said he had observed Atmospherics planes taking off from there and breaking up good clouds.

Another farmer and rancher. Nolan Henson who lives near Happy produced charts which showed extreme fluctuations in rainfall in several area towns after the programs had started Henson said he obtained some of the figures from official
