That excellent naturalist and charming writer, Frank Buckland, describes with great spirit the new performing built at the West minster Aquarium, London. The built is an old hand at the Spanish bull fights. He has, however, luckily, found a sincere friend in Signor Ortica, an experienced bull fighter, who has made him his friend. So great friends are the man and this savage beads that they are inseparable. Ortica-sheeps with the built—coiled up between the sminsfle legs. On one occasion some people came in the night to rob Ortica. Mr. Bull ficard the thieves, and shortly made these gentlemen retreat. He is a magnificent animal, standing about five feet high, as black as night, only that the hair is sworn off from the foreguaters: the rost of the hair is shiring like a satin dress. His name is Ligero, weight 1,300 pounds, bred by the Marquis of Table lentes, stud animal and six years old. Suffice it to say that the animal is from the neighborhood of Seville (the capital of Andalusia), a place well known for its breed of cattle. The bull has a temper of his own. Nobody is allowed to touch him but Ortics, and there are not many who would volunteer so to do.
