THE LOCAL CATTLE PLAGUE

San Antonio, July 21, 1879.

Editors San Antonio Expess:

In this, the time of our trouble and distress, we appeal to you for assistance. We sak you through your paper to try and do what we can not accomplish. We want you to impress upon the minds of our city authorities that the tax-payers, and citizens generally, have some rights that a cow should respect, and forein lies our grievance.

The writer, and many of his neighbors, have been to some trouble and expense to ornament with shade trees, not only their own front yards, but the sidewalks in front of their several sidewalks, in order that the wayfaring man, the weary traveler and the folling citizen, might as they tramped along the dusty streets, occasionally find a grateful shade "neath the spreading boughs of some sturdy oak, or some other tree, where they could rest and wipe the perspiration from their brows.

It beats all the cow ordinances of the city, and the "vigilant" police besides, even if an occasional heart-shot does send a ruthless bovine to the bone-yard. It seems to be the only recourse under the circumdances.

Gathering Them In

Deputy sheriffs Gleason and Sheely deserve a gold medal each from the law-abiding citizens of Bezar county for their vigilance and general efficiency. Within the past two days, they have made seven arrests, as follows:

Christian Hartzloff, against whom there are various indictments in Bianco county.

Officer Glesson states that Hartzieff, while confined in the Blauco jail, attempted self, but was cut down. Not to hang nimeel, but was cut down. And dismayed, he again attempted to kill himself by taking a piece of glass and cutting the arteries of his wrists. Again, however, he was discovered in time to have his purpose frustrated. He then broke jail and has since
