We received our decorations—a wide piece of red ribbon and a pirr—and each found a different manner of pluning the ribbon to his coat. More music—we were a growd now—and we ruade way for the rosiere as she entered, and I wish I could say she was handsome; and she was, if we all believe in the old adage that "handsome is that handsome doss," for her record was not of negative goodness, but of active virtue; and, as an old native, who knew her well, said to me, "When a young girl has lost both father and mother, she has many hardships to put up with." But it is a fete and we crowd into the reception room? Decorated gentlemen—decorated with other orders than the rosiere's—are designated tow conduct the chosen and her "maids of honor" to the church; more music and we are marching through the muddy streets by the longest way between files of soldiers and fremen, behind a crowd of white-dressed young women and flying banners. The windows and doorways are filled; we have got ahead of the little mayor—we apologize, and enter the church behind him, but rather in advance of others. The church is packed. Benner, who from all accounts was murdered on the 23rd of last month on the road between Brownsville and Corpus Christil by his traveling companion, Dreyer, reached this city last evening on the Corpus stage with the body, which was temporarily placed under the charge of Mr. A. Dreisa. It will be conveyed to New Braunfela, the home of the deceased, and where his aged mother recides, this morning, where it will be interred. Mr. Schmitt has furnished the Exranss with the following full and very interesting account of his experience and discoveries, which shows up not only the atrocity of the crime and the cold the county officials of Nucose county, who seem to have been utterly regardless of their duty to solve the mystery of the murder and bring the fiend who perpetrated it to a just retribution. Mr. Schmitt says that one of the officials, Peyton Smythe, who will be remembered as a citizen of this place in former years, actually demanded pay from him for the performance of duties which it was his sworn office to execute. The coroner's inquest, which has been continued from time to time, will resume its session on the 24th to conclude the second of the property of the county of the received of the county of the myster of the county of
