in a practical sort of way. Economy being his motto, he concluded that the expenses of a decent funeral might be considerably curtailed by providing himself with the necessarios consequent upon the consignment of his body to its eternal resting-place. What was the sense, thought he, to postpone such preparations until it was too late, leaving them for others to make, and to be paid for regardless of expense. So

HE RESCIVED TO CHEAT THE UNDERTAKES, and make his own coffin. Hearing that the receptacle for his remains had long since been completed by Mr. Vivroux, an Expanse reporter gesterday visited his work shop to see it and have a talk with the man who so quietly swaited his time to die and be buried in it. Upper entering the shop, just overhead the coffin was observed, Vivroux at the time being busily engaged attaching a pair of steel supports to a pair of shoes belonging to a child affected with weak ankles. "What is that Mr. Vivroux?" loquired the reporter, bloking up at the coffin, and affecting total ignorance. "That is a coffin for me," was the unreserved response.

N.—"You see, nonetime a man get no much to do, and I work mit him. I dinks it he about droe year as I finish."

R.—"It is rather strange and unusual for a man to make his own coffin—don't you think so?"

in San Antonic from the old world and estited down and enterwed energetically into his trade. He located in a small frame shanly, about 16x10, on Navarro street, where he remains to this day, having by this time a teaming to this day, having by this time a statimed the ripe age of three score and six years. Having brought with him from the Patherland about ten thousand keys and a full complement of tools, he pursued his avocation easily and with success, earning year in and year out something more than his daily bread. Being exceedingly industrious, as well as frugal and economical, a five apace Mr. Vivroux began to triens as well as frigal and economical, and as he saw his friends and acquaintances and persons generally constantly passing from this mundane sphere, death was made to appear to him as the inevitable terminus of life, and he resolved to prepare for it. In its allusion, the reference is not a more preparation, though Mr. Vivroux has always been a good and law-abding citizen, but it is meant that he began to providing himself with the necessaries consequent upon the consignment of his body to its sternal resting-place. What was the sense, thought he, to postpone such preparations until it was too late, leaving time to time as years roll around, to celebrate, the time of gifts that will grace the occasion. Thus thin wood, leather, cloth, tin foil, all will be a sense, thought he, to postpone such and the preparations until it was too late, leaving the invitations for calebration, and partake of the hospitalities of the host and host save because one of the conditions of the occasion. Thus thin wood, leather, cloth, tin foil, all will be a second to the considerable curvation of the second to the constant of the consta time to time as years roll around, to celebrate the periods of wedded life referred to above, silver and golden weddings being most commonly remembered in this section. Last evening, however, a very large party of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Fields assembled at the elegant residence of Mr. Ellis Roberts, on Soledad street, to do honor to the fifth anniversary of their marriago—that is, to celebrate their wooden wedding. The coccasion proved he exceedingly plokasant one to those present, the genial groom and his kind lady sparing no energy to render it so, Among those present were a number of our most secomplished vocal and instrumental nusicians, who furnished most appreciative entertainment, while a genial, social spirit, ruled all. Shortly after the reception of those invited had closed, a most sumptuous supper was served, and heartily enjoyed. Many presents, in fact they would have filled a good sized earl-bed, were received by Mrs. Fields, with the heartiest congratulations from every one, and wishes, that she but grave doubt

A Thirt's Escape.

About 4 c'clock yesterday morning, while special offices, Wagner, passed along Common more street at its intersection with Navarro, has observed a man who had, been walking the ward Commerce street, wheel and turn to hand. The fact is that there is a very important election pending in Ohio, and the republication of a great Southers rebet to the contract of the contractor, and the Declaration of Independence was pointed, and as he passed under the gallight near Groon's bank, Wagner emerged from his hiding place and started toward the rogue, heeding not the command, rather quickened his steps, when Wagner left hy his heavy walking stick at him. But the stick missed the mark, and on the fellow flew up Commerce street, and around to Market through Cocarron, next to Leroux & Cosgrove's. Here the officer lost sight of the man, and returned to gather up the plunder that had been dropped. It consisted of preserves, jelly, land, flour, steps and the proposed of the man, and returned to gather up the plunder that had been dropped.
