mount importance of a speedy and adequate improvement of the main channel of these rivers, they are of the opinion that such a result should be accomplished on its merits, which are amply sufficient to commend it to the favorable consideration of all reasonable men. This convention is opposed to the unnecessary expenditure of large sums of money in the improvement of the tributaries for the purpose of securing an influence for the improvement of the three main rivers. Great as may be the necessity for the improvement of the main channels of these rivers named, that necessity should not be met by squandering millions of dollars on minor and unimportant dreams. Therefore, be it resolved, that we, representatives of thirteen states, in convention assembled, do hereby urge upon congress the importance of making liberal appropriations for the three named rivers.

Washington, October 17.—The positofice, department to day issued an order for the astablishment of the free delivery service at Houston, Texas, commencing November 1st,

Mr. Max Oppenheimer, representing the firm of B. Oppenheimer & Co., returned yesterday from an absence for two months in the interest of his firm in the country to the southeast. He reports having been successful in naking sales, and thinks the business outlook is growing more cheerful. Everything is unusually quiet on the frontier, in the way of criminal disorders, and the people are marching along briskly in the road of improvement. The country below San Diego, he says, is the finest be ever traveled through, both for water and grass, and cattle and sheep are in a first-class condition. At San Diego, he cook the cars, and rode down to Corpus. The railway, he says, is not yet under regular management. One train jamped the track a short distance out from San Diego, and the engine of the train upon which he took passage was something like the wagon in the old song of "going up Bunker hill, coming down," for the concern stood still though the wheels turned around. The reason given for this was that the track was wet. At any rate, they were forced to uncouple three of the cars, including the passenger coach to the rear, and the passengers were compelled to mount the wool sacks of a couple of flats and take an open air ride passenger coach to the rear, and the passengers were compelled to mount the wool sacks of a couple of flats and take an open air ride the balance of the way. Corpus was reached at midnight. The town was found to Le dull, nothing searcely doing except the trade in wool. Mr. E. Norris, a large dry goods merchant of the town, expressed an inclination to remove his business up to San Antonio. Col. Upson and Mr. H. L. Berg were there, having been met at San. Diego and conveyed to Corpus on a special train by President Lott, of their new railway.

Mr. Oppenheimer says there is great complaint in some parts of the country through which he passed about the irregularity of the mails. Subscribers to the Daily Express at San Diego, who should receive the paper every day when the stage from this city-reaches them, state that copies are often detained two or three days and sometimes do not reach them at all. Many persons in the south make a mistake by ordering bulls two years old. If they would order bull calves in the fall, that are six or eight months old, they would come nearer hitting the nail on the head. They would then run but little if any risk of acclimating the animal. The freight expense would be much less, the cost of the animal would be less, and he would be ready for moderate service in the spring. And this remark applics to cattle of all breeds. Buy young for a southern latitude. Parchase in the fall and early winter, instead of the spring and summer, and with a little syrra cars the following summer the animal will do well and live to an advanced age.

Breeders of horned cattle, who did not wish to have the horns grow, have been in the habit of searing the horns of their calves with a red het iron, as soon as they showed above the top of the head. Perhaps a continuation of this made, the costs and of producing bound calves, and so they gave birth to polled one if you have revergettle all polled one is for a polled beast, you could but notice that the bone on top of it is higher than one is housed. It is higher than one is housed to that which etherwise would have gone to that which etherwise would have gone to that which etherwise would have gone to form horns, in part, at least.

A cubical box 12½ inches each way will hold a bushell. Hence to accertain the contents of a bin, take a stick or rule 12½ inches long, slivide it by marks into tenths and hundredths. Measure the length, breadth and depth of this rule, multiply the three dimensions together, and the product will be bushels. This is the most convenient and ease least method known. Use the rule as though it were feet and inches. Suppose, for example, a bin measures 3.5 in length, 5.7 in width, and 4.9 in depth. The product of those 237, 405, or about 247, 4 bushels. Every farmer should make such a rule, and use it in all cases where the contents of bins or boxes are required.

Chicago, October 17.—The excitement on change continues to-day, and wheat has reached the highest point yet, seiling at $1.23. There was, however, a sudden break, and prices declined to $1.18%, amid greatest excitement. Corn is nominal at about 55 for November, and provisions for the different options were decidedly low for January, Lard which soid early at $6,30 declined to $4.18.

The receipts of cotton to-day included twelve bales, making the total receipts to date six hundred and thirty-four bales. The market is strong at our figures and with a probability of an advance. Our local grain market is unchanged. The oats and one of corn. The stock now in this city is well distributed and the local demand is good.

Northern produce is unchanged in price, and the receipts included but one carload. The demand continues good while the present change in the weather to cooler temperature is favorable for keeping the stock in sound condition.

There is no change to note in country produce. The receipts are this and the demand good.
