The New York Times after reciting the usual words of commendation in advance of national elections... "With all known cases of governmental mismanagement, however, the general average in such cases has been so great that one might well be inclined to regard the present administration as a comparatively good one."

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Press.
New York, Aug. 30.—There is a certain element of ignorance and discontent in our country which is always complaining of the extravagance of the cost of our government.

It is to be noted in favor of England, at least, that while the people pay high for public services, they get good work—a better return than we do. The public service is very thorough and the grade of the public servant higher than with us. All this is done at a cost which is not so high as ours. The cost of the public service in England is for the most part, it is likely that we both, in their having too costly a public service, are demanding too cheap a cost. The cost of the public service in England is for the most part, it is likely that we both, in their having too costly a public service, are demanding too cheap a cost.
