SAN ANTONIO TEXAS, THURSDAY MORNING OCTOBER 30, 1879

We are nothing now-a-days unless analytic. A painter of genus gives birth to a crific of geoias, who discovers meanings in his pictures of which the artist was quite unconscious. A poet publishes a boos of lyrics, and then a pamphlet explaining their real significance. We in our little English musical world have very little original work to comment upon at present; and so, as Byron took his here frame do mean; we take the opers of the "Pinafore" for exthetic contemplation.

That the "Pinafore" deserves its success there can be no doubt. Putting aside all question of quantity, the mere fertility of invention required to discover a libratic of any reasonable freedmans or novelty, and to

What is the "Pinafore" but a sign of the times! We have rubbed the sheen off eyerything, and the old dramatic illusion has shared the analysis of the dramatic illusion has shared the analysis of true that it was to the calmine of the state. The drafting of romance of unusual incident, all are butts for the arrows of the satirist. The old conventionalities of the stage, which are as necessary to its existence as accidental shadows and the pyramidical composition to an artist's work, are all stripped of their old garmente and held up to the jees of warp, age, or even more jaded and cynical youth. What would old Dibdin have thought of the words of "He is an Englishman?"

And the marvellous cleverness with which the attack is made alross discuss the criticisms of the old school. The nestmess of the verse, the appropriateness of the musical

Macon, Ga., October 29.—The confederate monument was unveiled to-day with impressive ecremonies in the presence of 25,000 persons. Great enthusiasm prevailed. More than twenty companies of volunteer soldiers of Georgia and Fiorida were present, together with Gen. Cook's brigade and veterans. The affair surpassed in brilliancy and numbers any seen heretofore in middle Georgia.

After marching through the streets the procession balted at the confederate monument, where an immense concourse had assembled. After a salute by the artillery, Col. Thomas Hardeman, orator of the day, was introduced by Gov. Colquitt, and delivered a stirring, eloquent and patriotic address, in which he connelled peace, fraternity and the burial of all animosities. The speech was received with great enthusiasm. The visiting military were tendered a banquet at all the armories of the local companies to night. The city, is brilliantly illuminated, and the streets are througed. The celebration has been a greand success in server way.
