The work is still progressing inside the new Methodist Episcopal Church, on avenue C. The success of this enterprise has been most gratifying. The church which speaks most favorably for the liberality and public spirit of our citizens, as well as for the skill and care which has been exercised in its management. Thus far all have been well satisfied with the results of their maturity. For the purpose of raising the funds needed for finishing this edifice the ladies propose to serve lunches on Commerce street during the present week, beginning with Thursday, and they certainly deserve the hearty encouragement of our citizens.

A relic of seventy-six. Description of a pocket-knife which passed through the Revolution.

Our reporter was yesterday shown by Mr. F. A. Hendricks, who is now in this city, a large and heavy pocket-knife, formerly the property of John Gamble, who died at Lawrence, South Carolina, during the year 1865. It was received by Mr. Hendricks mother, in 1829, and came into the possession of Mr. Hendricks, from his mother, in 1847. The knife has been a dear, dearly prized by the family, and is still used by the son, and his wife, who are now in their sixties. They have stowed away his rolls of greenbacks. Considering these facts, it appears almost unreasonable to presume that the man did the deed that he is held in custody for. The knife probably grew very interesting before long, and as further developments transpire.

Mr. L. H. Carpenter has just returned from a business trip through the country towards Corpus Christi, and reports the people prosperous and happy and the community in a very fine condition. Mr. Carpenter said that many wool growers who have heretofore been compelled to sell their wool from the section of country through which he passed, will in the future bring their wool to San Antonio. A number had sold their wool, for example, to San Antonio buyers, though it was at the time of the sales was stored at Corpus.

A FRENCH COURT IN TROUBLE.
The Serious Charge of Theft Imputed Against Him—What Some of His Friends Think of His Case.

During the early part of the week, as the leaders of the Express will remember, there appeared in these columns an account of the robbery of Falin, Schreiner & Biow's safe, at Centre Point, Kerr county, the amount taken being estimated at $10,000.

The robbery appeared to be committed in mystery, but suspicions were rested upon a man staying at a ranch, a few miles distant from Centre Point, and who is, indeed in fact, a French count. A few days ago we received a letter from a Kerrville correspondent stating that he had been learned that the count had made arrangements for leaving the country for New Mexico, and was en route to San Antonio.

He was with another man, by the name of Johnson, thereupon left Kerrville to intercept the man if the reports of the robbery were true.

While at Concho and San Saba Inns, he was arrested, and informed that he must consider himself arrested. Our correspondent states that he was staying at the inn when the man who took any part in the arrest would be prosecuted for it. The sheriff thereupon took him into the rooms of a house he had and searched his person. Painter and his companion, who was not identified, were in the same room, and the money was not found.

Finally, his man was demanded, and in removing it the man was seen to transfer something to his hand. The group it righted his hand, and it was found to contain $210 in currency, among which were fifty-dollar bills, five twenties, and the remainder smaller notes. The money is said to have come from the Texian government.

The count claimed that he was near his nineteenth birthday, and informed that he had been learned that he was near his nineteenth year.

The life of Don Antonio was to be independently written, to fill a volume, when this country was the province or part of a foreign nation. Born a Mexican, he united with his fellow countrymen in their earlier struggles, and certainly occupied no unimportant position in the early days of the Texian independence.

The greatest number of drunkards, to properly written, would fill a volume. The life of Don Antonio, however, was a short one, when this country was the province or part of a foreign nation. Born a Mexican, he united with his fellow countrymen in their earlier struggles, and certainly occupied no unimportant position in the early days of the Texian independence.
