

Wednesday Morning, November 8, 1890
ALTHOUGH the returns are not all in, it is safe to make the assertion that upon its election. A hot race goes on this point.

SALVING the famous tragedian, is expected to visit this country shortly. He will doubtless wait until the Bernhardt sensation subsides.

THE Kerville Frontiersman has changed its mind. Instead of being an independent paper, it will be an independent democratic paper.

SCHULZBERG has a new weekly newspaper—the Enterprise—published by Mr. W. A. McDaniel. It is small but good. Democratic.

INCREASE in the money letter is rapidly on the wane. Many who were greatly excited over the matter two days ago now don't care a blank whether Garfield wrote it or not.

NOW that the election is over, what are we to talk about? What say our citizens to another railroad to the Gulf? It is a good subject to talk about, even if nothing is accomplished.

THE latest who heard of Marshall Russell is waiting people to gather from inspiration from the tomb of Sumner. We may expect to hear of a draft for inspiration on the tomb of John Brown, next.

NOW we know what we know, among which we know that we would like to know something that we don't know. Keep cool till the returns are in, and then we will know more than we know now.

THE election being over, the important question now presenting itself is, what is to be done with Grant? What scheme can be formed for keeping him prominently before the people through another four years?

GRANT is recognized as building a new railroad on an average of once every three weeks, but some having been built by that plan within the last three weeks, the Herald complains of apathy in connection with the industry named.

THE statement of young Dent that he was one of the thousands brought to New York from Washington to vote for the republican ticket, will not settle any one when we remember that the same party increased the colored vote of Indiana over one thousand in one year.

TEXAS is but one right way to do it. Every man who can be proven to have participated in the Denver riot should be arrested if it takes the whole power of the United States to do it. The ring leaders should be hanged for murder, and the others sent to the penitentiary for a term of not less than five years. If it can be proved that any politician incited the mob to violence, they should be arrested and punished as necessary to the world.

TEXAS was 3,322,651 letters registered in the post office at Washington during the first week ending June 30th last. Of these 30,000 were returned from foreign countries, 2,000,000 were destroyed, as the readers could not be found, 21,971 contained threats and notes of the face value of $1,000,000, and 20,000 contained $10,000,000 worth of property was returned to the owners, and some owners could not be found. Over 9,000 letters were addressed to various addresses, and the names of the addresses were not known. The double-barreled pamphlets, magazines, papers and other printed matter, hereafter said for waste paper, are hereafter to be distributed to charitable and reformatory institutions in and around the capital.

A seven cent bill is pending in the circuit court at Chicago. A Baltimore named John Kowalski, having committed perjury against the superintendent of the German Catholic cemetery of St. Boniface, the Rev. Clement Venn, and the Rev. P. Wilhelm Dornan, to prevent the burial of a body from interfering in any way in the disinterment of the body of a dead man of the complainant. The latter declared that he authorized the temporary interment of the deceased, a child of four months, pending the purchase of a burial lot in the Bohemian national cemetery. He recently purchased a lot in that burying ground, and secured the necessary consent for a disinterment of the body from the city health department. He then asked the superintendent of the St. Boniface for permission to remove the body, but was refused and was referred to the Rev. Clement Venn, who also was refused, and he then declared that he had authorized the disinterment and removal of the body, as a minister of the German Catholic church, which he should not refuse. The complainant and his wife, therefore, appeal to the court, and ask that the privilege of burying their child in the spot originally chosen.

GARFIELD'S FRIENDS.
Some of those prominently figuring in the prosecution of Philip, charged with the forgery of the money letter, are worthy to be mentioned in connection with the benefit of the Credit Mobilier deal. One in the character of an expert was proven to have purchased the money letter a forgery before he ever saw it, the acquaintance of another testify that they would not believe his under oath, while a third and most prominent of the three, Marcus Cicero Mackay, as mentioned in a pamphlet, commenced his public career by a conspiracy with a large partner to rob the Treasury of the Government of Tiffany & Co., but escaped punishment by disguising his plunder, afterwards was charged with highway robbery, but escaped to England, where he robbed a man of his clothes and was sentenced to six months imprisonment at hard labor. After this he appears to have turned his attention to collection, wife sleeping and awaiting of creditors, with his reputation made him a necessity to the reputation politicians of New York. The Washington National Republican of May 16, 1876, says of him:

"This notorious individual is still a large, well-dressed man, practicing his notorious arts of deception and lawlessness with a skill and dexterity that are almost unparalleled in connection with their craft; collecting money, and having his wife on the same, a notorious prostitute, and abiding in a hotel property made over to his wife to defend his creditors; blackmailing citizens, and sharing his plunder with his wife; extracting every law, and every dollar, from those who have purchased money."

With such material, the prosecution in the case should not have been a less or less testimony of any kind they might desire.

THE POPULAR VOTE OF 1876

For the benefit of our readers in studying the election returns we publish the popular vote of the States for Tilden, Hayes and Cooper in 1876. Four years ago the Colorado legislature chose the electors for that State, but they were elected by the people. Colorado has three electors. The vote of the State in 1876 was as follows: Republican, 14,206, Democratic, 11,573 and Greenback, 2,784, leaving a republican majority of 33. In addition to the vote given below in 1876 there were 9,522 votes cast for Smith, the temperance candidate, and 2,636 scattering, the total vote of the country, according to our authority—the American Almanac for 1880—being 8,412,605 Tilden's majority of the popular vote was 156,909.

State	Rep.	Dem.	Green.
Alabama	102,092	47,250	500
Arkansas	102,092	47,250	500
California	78,483	79,289	47
Colorado	3,084	3,084	714
Delaware	13,361	13,252	109
Florida	24,749	32,840	7,091
Georgia	139,080	52,440	11,200
Illinois	213,520	209,011	5,509
Indiana	112,000	171,207	5,914
Iowa	129,000	171,207	5,914
Kentucky	126,000	97,136	28,864
Kansas	129,000	171,207	5,914
Maine	49,273	98,546	603
Massachusetts	109,777	150,063	779
Michigan	129,000	171,207	5,914
Minnesota	48,789	72,982	2,201
Missouri	209,077	143,829	6,248
Montana	17,254	13,216	2,201
Nebraska	8,200	19,200	1,000
New Hampshire	20,500	41,500	100
New Jersey	201,000	181,000	20,000
New York	1,211,000	1,147,000	1,500
North Carolina	102,092	47,250	500
Ohio	302,142	339,626	5,484
Oregon	102,092	47,250	500
Pennsylvania	209,100	261,192	5,092
Rhode Island	13,200	26,400	1,000
South Carolina	30,800	61,600	2,000
Tennessee	129,000	171,207	5,914
Texas	201,000	181,000	20,000
Virginia	201,000	181,000	20,000
West Virginia	102,092	47,250	500
Wisconsin	129,000	171,207	5,914
Total	4,291,237	4,023,909	97,461

Retiring Board's count, Nov. 25, 1876. A majority of 16 to 187 was claimed for Tilden by the democracy. The Florida court of Florida gave Tilden a majority of 1,874 in the State of Florida. The Florida court of Florida gave Tilden a majority of 1,874 in the State of Florida. The Florida court of Florida gave Tilden a majority of 1,874 in the State of Florida.

The following shows the number of electoral votes each State is entitled to:

State	Electoral Votes
Alabama	10
Arkansas	7
California	9
Colorado	3
Delaware	3
Florida	3
Georgia	11
Illinois	13
Indiana	11
Iowa	7
Kentucky	12
Kansas	6
Maine	4
Massachusetts	13
Michigan	13
Minnesota	7
Mississippi	7
Missouri	12
Montana	3
Nebraska	7
New Hampshire	4
New Jersey	14
New York	36
North Carolina	10
Ohio	21
Oregon	5
Pennsylvania	23
Rhode Island	4
South Carolina	7
Tennessee	10
Texas	12
Virginia	12
West Virginia	5
Wisconsin	9

COMPLIMENTARY TO TEXAS AND TEXANS.

One of the most forcible and eloquent speeches made in this city during the recent political campaign was that of J. B. Carr, Esq., at Turner hall, Saturday night last. Owing to the press of matter upon our columns we give only a portion of the address which was given on the following morning.

The address, however, will be found good at any time, and we publish it as showing the views of our people and country entertained by one who has been here long enough to become acquainted with both. During the course of his remarks, Mr. Carr said:

A stranger's opinion of the character of a people depends greatly upon his own character. The view he takes depends upon his own standpoint. If he comes here to make a fortune out of the commission of the people to perpetrate a crime, he has a different opinion of the people than if he comes here to do a good deed and identify himself with the people and the interests of the country.

When I came to Texas last January for the first time, I came to stay and with a determination to be satisfied. I was truly a stranger in a strange land. I was looking for a familiar face among the people who thronged my street. The winter, which was like a Wisconsin April, soon passed, and when greater heat and a different opinion of the people than I could readily give under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government in which I lived, and whose very streets and walls of broken china are covered with the blood of heroes whose names are as immortal as the pages of history. It seemed impossible that I could be a stranger in a land where I could worship God under my own vine and fig tree, where the roses ever bloom, and set the bells ringing in every lower, I was bewildered with the marvelous beauty of the quiet and the quiet of the country. It is impossible that I had become a citizen of a city which was founded by the government

