Wetting would have been hanged the past year, though we used to be told national banks made from fifty to seventyfive per cent. profit on their capital each year. But every time a national bank fails the people are furnished with an evidence o the desirability of national banks over private banks of issue. Each one of the thirtyseven banks failing last year had at least from fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars in notes distributed throughout the country, jet not one cent was lost to the bolders of these pect to spend my days and die there peacefully enough;

There is one idea surgested by our Washington correspondent that must commend itself to every thinking southerner. R is The wool, beel, rice, Bides, cotton, sugar, wheat and correspondent control only an and wool, are unprotected in nothing southerner. that if we would prosper, and profit by our prosperity, we must keep our wealth at home. We stare in open eyed wonder at the great manufacturing cities of the north and the great commercial marks of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, the results in a great degree of our own efforts, but never stop to think of the passibility of building up such centres of trade and commerce in our own country and for our own benefit and aggrandizement. A New York where the city of New Orleans stands would add a doicity of New Orleans stands would add a dolsissippi, Arkansas, Alabama and Texas. The trade we give annually to the northern cities would soon build up a powerful rival to New York, and the influence of such an aggregation of capital at Charleston, South Carolina, or almost any other southern port

Rassas and Texas to Europe through New York?

The Difficulty

I could only answer the practical Vermonter by eaving that the south is constituted of farming, and not of village or city populations. There is no co-operation among them except that effected by howing politicians. They accomplished co-operation by a desperate strongle for purposes of secession, but never dreamed of practical service to the son, hor of real southern independence. Direct southern foreign trade has no reference in the distribution of offices and power, and conthern "statesmen," so-called, could discover in this "commercial independence" an means of selfath personal aggrandizences. They must come to Washington and spread themselves before the contry as words with Baline, while the second of the second village of the second second second property of the contry as words with Baline, who have been administration at home, and the southern violines by the sympathics of his robbed, despised and plandered constituency.

If the people were practical rather than sentimental if they co-operated in matters of money such trade as they do on "boiling over quadrissially in hell's borth of political campaigns" the southern would be the richest and most powerful of all the states. But the world only sees the south through the medium of New York and Boston people and newpapers, and through the mad antics of excitable fellows at the hustings. Europe accepts Conkling's misregreentations and Grant's contradictory is widtle as throughout the entire south. If the south had been as "solid" for keeping the profits of its business at home as it has been in politics during the past fifteen years, it would now sway a full share of the power of the country commercially, and that carries political power with it. We have been acting as though we believed every good must come through the election of democrats to office, and all the unity of action among the southern people has been to that end. If we had worked for a solid south in business with nearly doubled our population, manufactured our own goods and be now enjoying the profits of our own labor instead of paying it
