Friends are one of God's greatest blessings.

Words are difficult to find that adequately express our deep appreciation for all the ways our friends have helped us through this past month. Traveling such an unexpected journey that ended in Tom joining his loved ones in Heaven was made bearable by so many expressions of love and support.

From the EMS crew that got Tom to the surgical team in time to save his life, to friends who helped us celebrate Tom's life with prayer, music, tears and laughter and every act of kindness and love in between, we thank each of you from bottom of our hearts.

Neva Yates Memorial Roping Raises $1500 for the Cross Plains Cancer Fund

Neva Yates would be proud. There were three different ropings going on last Saturday, and The Turkey Creek Rodeo Club still raised $1500.00 for the Cancer Fund. This was in part due to the generosity of Gary and Brenda Couvillion, Mike and Sandy Yates, and Wendy Walters our buckle sponsors, and Guyann Gains' kind donation.

Championship header and heeler buckles were awarded to each of the divisions, #8, #10, and #12. Beating out 22 teams, Ld McConthy is our #8 Champion Header, and Shye Pate (the 11yr old Ranch Rodeo Top Hand reserve champion) is our #8 Champion Heeler, second place was taken by Casey Sutton (header) and Joe Stoker (heeler).

In our #10 roping, our largest division with 57 teams, Joe Stoker and Dawson Whatley took home the titles of #10 Champion Header and Heeler. Second place went to Bruce Vinson and Twister Vinson, third place to Casey Sutton and Kenny Callaway, and fourth went to Kenny Callaway and Casey Sutton.

The Texas History Minute Sponsored by: HANNER CHEVROLET

Former Governor, U.S. Senator Price Daniel

Price Daniel was one of the few men in Texas History to serve in all three branches of state government—as governor, state legislator, and state Supreme Court justice. He was known for his sense of right and wrong, but his stands were sometimes controversial. In a political career that spanned decades, Daniel became one of the most well-known figures in the state. Born Marion Price Daniel, Sr., in October 1910, he was the son of a rancher. He was born just outside the small Southeast Texas community of Dayton and was the oldest of three children. He was a conscientious, hard-working student. As a teenager, he moved briefly to Fort Worth, where he graduated high school.

After high school, he enrolled at Baylor University in Waco. To help pay for college, he worked as a reporter for the former Waco News-Tribune for a time. He graduated with a law degree in 1932 and returned to Liberty County to practice law.

He quickly became a respected attorney in the area and won fame in a series of high-profile local cases. He also briefly ran a local newspaper. In 1938, he was elected to the State House of Representatives as a Democrat. He served on the Judiciary Committee as well as the Oil, Gas, and Mining Committee and supported the oil and gas industry. Proposals for a state sales tax emerged, and Daniel became part of a group known as the "Immortal 56" in his outspoken opposition to it. Respected by his colleagues for his energy and integrity, he was elected Speaker of the House for the 1943 session.

The session took place in the midst of World War II. Though still the Speaker of the House, Daniel decided to serve his country in a new way and enlisted in the army at the end of the session in May 1943. He started as a private but was sent to train as an officer and became a lieutenant in the judge advocate general's office. He served mostly in the Pacific and was honorably discharged as a captain in May 1946.

Immediately upon his discharge, he ran for state attorney general for the July primary. Using his fame from his war record and speakership, he won easily. He worked to defeat organized gambling in the state. His office filed more than 5,000 lawsuits while he served on dozens of committees and recommended hundreds of pieces of legislation to the state legislature. However, two cases in particular stood out in his time as attorney general. In 1947, an African-American post office employee, Heman Sweatt, applied for admission to the University of Texas Law School. Similarly to cases erupting across the South, though Sweatt was qualified for admission, segregation kept him from attending because of skin color. As attorney general, Daniel had to defend the laws of the state at the time and took the case all the way to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court ruled in 1950 that Sweatt deserved an equal education, and as a result was ordered enrolled in the law school.

The Tidelands Controversy became another explosive issue. In the late 1940s, Texas was trying to enforce its mineral rights in the Gulf of Mexico. Federal law claimed that the state had no jurisdiction in those areas and that any oil leases belonged to the federal government. Being an oil-rich state, the Texas public took a strong interest in the case. Daniel argued that Texas had an 11-mile claim dating to its time as an independent republic. This sparked a sharp controversy with President Harry S. Truman and his belief that federal law superseded any claim Texas might have had. The Supreme Court agreed.

As a result of the court fight, in 1952, Daniel refused to back the Democratic presidential nominee, Gov. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois, in favor of the Republican nominee, Texas native Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower. Daniel also announced his run for the U. S. Senate that year to replace the retiring Sen. Tom Connally. He ran as a "Texas Democrat" in defiance of the Truman administration's stands on the Tidelands issue. Daniel won easily, as did Eisenhower. In 1953, Eisenhower signed a bill sponsored by Daniel to recognize the Texas claim on the 11-mile limit. The result was that Texas was able to claim hundreds of millions of dollars in the coming years.

Price Daniel had risen rapidly in a short time. Now a U. S. Senator, his prospects seemed limitless. And in so many ways, his career was only beginning.

AND the RAINS CAME ...
 Man! Did they! You already know how powerful and devastating it was. Now it's time to pick up the pieces, clean up the mess, and rebuild the shattered lives and livings that still must be made. It's an uphill hike carrying a heavy load.
 Many have helped, and are still helping. My wife, for one, spent half her weekend in Houston replacing, taping and floating sheetrock. I've already acknowledged the many boat owners from Texas and Louisiana - including the "Cajun Navy". But enough can't be said about all these guys and that girl in the chartreuse raincoat that took command and dispatched the patchwork armada of Dunkirk-like citizen-sailors who motored to flooded neighborhoods and rescued marooned residents who had no other way out. They're all saints in my book.
 As recovery begins, people have asked "How's the fishing?" That's one of the few bright spots, and the answer is practically unanimous. It didn't take long for it to start improving. As reported earlier, the influx of fresh water may have caused the trout to seek deeper water since the fresh water stays on top of the salt water, temporarily. I talked to Capt. Frankie Eicholz (361-701-7711) in Port Aransas, the town that has for years used the slogan, "Where the fish bite every day." Those small signs along the roadside drove me crazy as a kid since I figured any place where fish bit every day must be Paradise. Capt. Frankie was on the water with clients Friday, his first day guiding since the storm, and he sounded downright jubilant.
 "Fish have to eat," he pointed out. And to eat, they have to bite. He said people south of Pt. A. were fishing the next week after the storm. "It may have slowed the fish down for a day or two," he added, "but as soon as the storm passed, they were probably biting again." His clients on Friday managed to boat 12 redfish and a trout.
 The problem is many support services are unavailable, he said. Some accommodations and restaurants are out of business, at least for now.

Fishing in the bays off the Texas coast is mostly back to normal after the hurricane, although floating or submerged debris can pose a hazard to navigation. Photo by John Jefferson.

Motels -- those still renting rooms -- have been taken over by utility companies repairing service. Some of the shrimp boats are working, but bait may be limited. Groceries are available, as is gasoline. Jim Friebele, a guide in Rockport, couldn't praise H.E.B. enough for their haste in resuming business. They even cooked BBQ in the parking lot for folks. Friebele said the Lighthouse Inn is currently closed.
 One guide and outdoor writer, Lefty Ray Chapa (210-260-6154), pointed out that since the storm struck just before Labor Day weekend, no fishing boats left port, and most fish are still in the water. Chapa also said duck hunting suffered since most duck blinds are gone. The South Bay Hunting Club is said to have lost 28, and is scrambling to rebuild before the season opens Nov. 4.
 All open businesses could use a hand ... and customers.

Ladybird Beetle

The process that occurs for the naming of a species of animal has always peaked my interest. Why animals have the common name that they have generally describes either the appearance of the animal or where it lives. However, one species of insect that is quite common in this area was first described as a Ladybird Beetle in Europe, perhaps in reference to the shiny and appealing appearance. Here in the United States this invertebrate animal is known by another name, and although this name is more of a slang name, it is the name that every person who spends anytime outdoors is familiar with, and that is the "ladybug".

There are several varieties of species of the Ladybird Beetle that inhabit the United States, but the one species that is common throughout west Texas is the Convergent Ladybird Beetle (Hippodamia convergens). This variety can be observed throughout the southwestern United States as well, primarily where food items are abundant. Taxonomically speaking, it comes from a gigantic and diverse order of insects (order Coleoptera) that include the infamous Scavenger Beetles from the Middle East.

Ladybird Beetles are, as the name implies, beetles, and beetles are insects, and like other members of this group, they have three body parts: the head, the thorax, and the abdomen. Each one of these body parts has a specific purpose, with the head being the area where the eyes and feeding appendages are, the thorax is where the legs and wings are attached, and the abdomen is where the majority of the internal organs are housed. Also like others in the insect group, the skeletal structure is on the outside of their body. This structure is known as the exoskeleton. They have six legs, as well as two pairs of wings and two antennae.

This particular species of beetle is quite attractive and eye-catching as the shiny, hardened wings are generally bright orange, and are more often than not adorned with large black circles. The thorax and head are jet black, and the thorax is often outlined with a white border. The thorax also typically has two white dots on top that at first glance appear like eyes. The mandibles are designed for chewing, while the eyes and antennae are small.

Convergent Ladybird Beetle (Hippodamia convergens)

Overall, this species is rather diminutive in size, with adults only attaining a total length of just under one-half inch. Despite the feminine namesake, there are no apparent differences in appearance between males and females.

While this brilliant coloration allows the animal to stand out against the green habitat that it normally prefers, it has been shown that the "ladybug" is rather distasteful and bitter to predators, perhaps a reason for the bright coloration.

The Ladybird Beetle is active during the day, and many individuals will congregate in areas where prey is abundant.

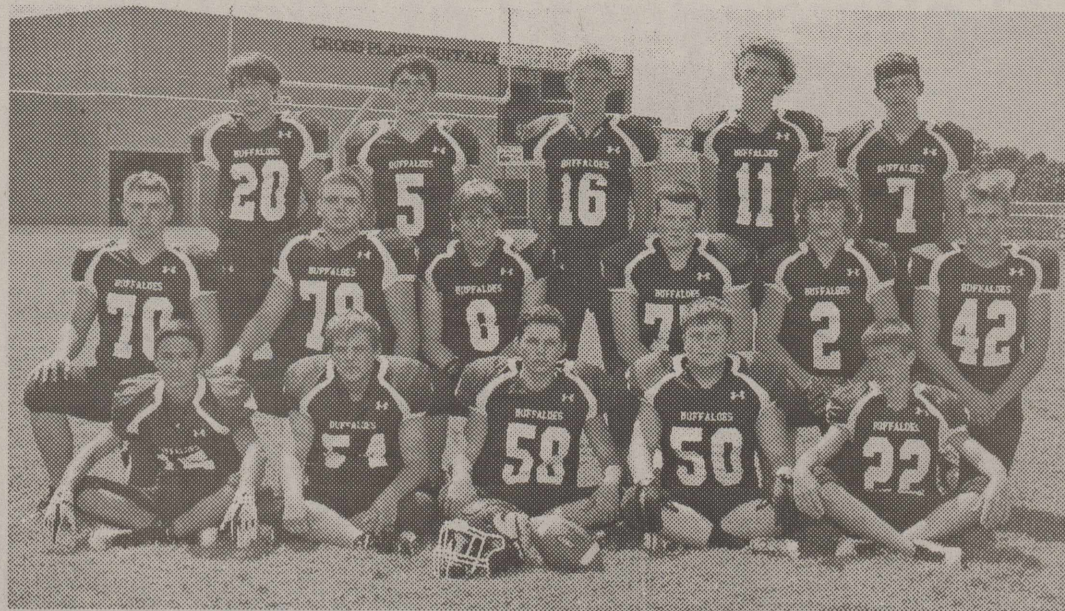

Gardens are a favorite area of congregation. Generally speaking, if one "ladybug" is observed, there are typically many more individuals close by!

Although small and seemingly innocuous, Ladybird Beetles are highly predatory, particularly when in the larvae stage. Many gardeners view this insect as beneficial, or "good bugs", because of their propensity of feeding on large amounts of crop and garden destroying insects such as aphids and other soft-bodied plant eaters.

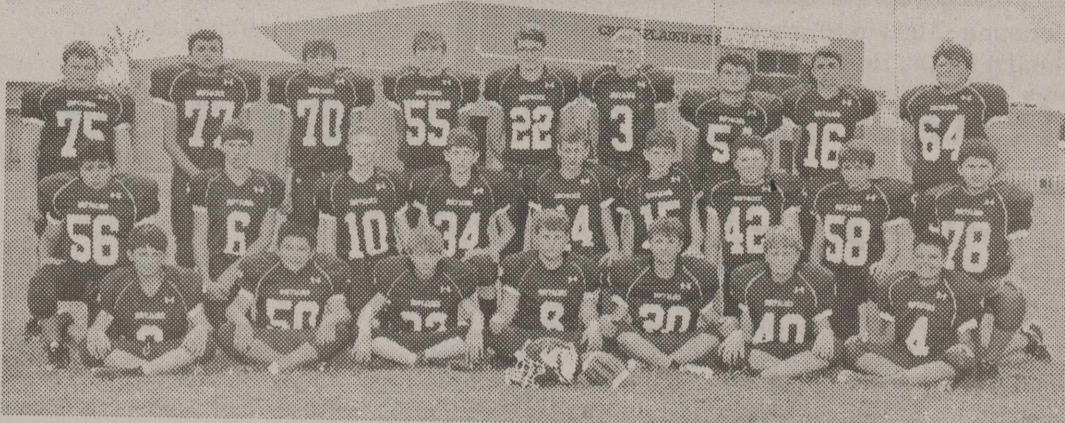

To that end, many companies will sell "ladybugs" as a way to control aphids; however, there are no scientific studies that show that these displaced insects will actually feast upon aphids upon their release. But even if it is nothing more than adding a colorful "good bug" to your garden, the possibilities of them feeding on damaging insects is well worth the buy.

Donating $1000 to Hurricane Harvey Relief - Katy Jo Morgan with employees from Habitat for the Horses

Texas Strong T-Shirts Raised Money for Hurricane Relief

Katy Jo Morgan, high school senior and owner of KJ Designs, recently held a fund raiser to help with the Hurricane Harvey Relief efforts. Katy Jo sold Texas Strong tee-shirts and all of the proceeds were donated to help animals that were directly affected by the hurricane.

After researching, she decided to give the money made from sales to Habitat for Horses located in Hitchcock, Texas. Katy Jo presented a check for $1000.00 to this horse facility to help with the cost that has been incurred while treating and caring for the horses. Habitat for Horses employees were very appreciative for this donation and were thankful to everyone that purchased these shirts. KJ Designs also would like to thank everyone that helped to make this possible.

Katy Jo is a Senior at Cross Plains High School and is very active in her as school as well as the community. Katy's tentative plans are attend Texas Tech in the fall of 2018.

Cross Plains to open district play Friday at Baird

By Al Pickett
Special Writer

After a bye week last week, the Cross Plains High School football team will open District 6-2A Division II play Friday night at Baird. Kickoff is set for 7:30 p.m.

Both teams made the playoffs last season, although the Buffaloes rallied to beat Baird 42-30 a year ago. This year, Cross Plains is off to a 3-2 start, losing to No. 8-ranked De Leon and dropping a 33-32 heartbreaker to San Saba.

Cross Plains features a powerful running game, led by Creed Goode, who has 877 yards and 13 touchdowns rushing through the first half of the season.

Baird, a young team with only three seniors, has struggled to 0-5 start on the season. One of the Bears' losses came against De Leon, too.

The Buffaloes edged Eldorado 13-6 in their last game, while Baird fell to Archer City 52-20 in its last outing.

Albany, ranked No. 6 in the state in Class 2A, is 5-0 and favored to repeat as the district champion. But Cross Plains is the only other district team with a winning record. Miles and Winters are both 1-4, while Bronte and Baird are both 0-5, meaning the race for the four playoff spots should be wide open.

Karl's Korner
It has been a busy summer. I have been to the Beef Cattle Short Course in College Station, which I recommend if you are running cattle on your land. I went to the Quail Symposium in Abilene to learn more about Quail and their habitats that they need to survive. I just finished up with the mosquito surveillance. This allowed us to know what kind of mosquito we have in Callahan and we were only looking for two kinds of mosquitoes. There are many different types of mosquitoes. I'm still working on the fly the count to see which bait is the most effective in the controls of flies. I just finished the third month with two more months to go. Now major fall stock shows have started. We have seen wet conditions for most of the summer depending on where you live.

August had mild temperatures, with us not even hitting 100 degrees for the month, but September had a couple of days in the 100's during the West Texas Fair. Most of the time we expect rain during the West Texas Fair but we did not even receive one drop. At the long-range weather forecast part of Beef Cattle Short Course shows above average rainfall October through December. Hopefully it will rain and I know I'm ready for cooler temperatures.

Callahan County Ag Fall Field Day

Ag field day was held on Tuesday September 19th. The field day consisted of James Jackson, a range specialist out Stephenville talking about sprayer calibration. James also talked about the importance of using surfactants and the reason why you need to use a surfactant with chemicals. We also looked at the IPT Prickly Pear plots to see how the plots are doing. All six plots were showing yellowing after 3 months. One major observation that was noticeable was the weed control within the pears. We then moved over to Joel Dement's place where Sammy and Matt from the NRCS gave a presentation on grasses and the varieties of grasses that they planted. Both Sammy and Matt discussed about what our area looked like 200 to 300 years ago and the varieties of grasses. Majority of Joel's place consisted of Texas Winter Grass. The NRCS went in and sprayed with Tordon 22K to take out the Prickly Pear in 2004. A couple of years ago they grub the mesquites that consumed over 80 percent of the area that they planned to put back to native state. They seeded back with summer varieties to allow Dement's place to have wide variation of summer grasses throughout the year. In the discussion, with the grubbing, many native grasses came back like vine mesquite which is native to our area. The program concluded at the extension office with Ralph Porter from Dow. Ralph talked about mesquite and prickly pear control. When it comes to spraying mesquite, Ralph stressed the importance of soil temperature and weather condition. Always make sure soil temperature is above 75 degrees, look at the foliage of the trees, and look at the reproductive state of the trees to know when the best time to spray. On Prickly Pear, Ralph said you can spray anytime of the year but it is best after a rain. I plan to have another field day next year at the same time.

Net Wrap vs Twine Bales

Two of the biggest factors in the production and quality of hay are weather and timing. We can't change the weather and you can't always control the timing. But how you package your bales of hay are up to you. This choice not only affects productivity in the field, also the nutritional quality of your bales when you feed them.

When it comes to hay, it's about potential storage losses, herd health, feed value, weight gains, meat/milk production, and fuel and labor cost.

When comes to deciding based on equipment and material cost, twine win easily, no doubt. But twine-wrapped bales can cost in other ways. When comparing operating speed, saving fuel cost, and time, net-wrapped is the way to go. Net-wrapped hay only takes two to four rotations while 20 plus rotations on twine. A study was conducted by the American Society of Agricultural and Biological Engineers (ASABE) shows bale production increased an average of 32 percent per bale when wrapped by net was applied instead of twine. That allows more time to get hay baled and save on fuel. This help on the wear and tear of your equipment. The biggest cost reduction probably happens during the handling and storage. In another study by ASABE study, storage and handling losses were reduced by as much as 65 percent when net-wrap was applied instead of twine. The reason is that net-wrapped bales hold their shape, one that is tighter bales, more uniform and stable in all storage conditions. Net-wrap increases the protection of the hay, helping shed the moisture away.

Twine-wrapped hay bales can also get the job done. You need to make sure that you store your hay on well drained soils to help in water damage. Twine bales stand a better chance of being stored in well drained soils or under a barn or a shed. I have learned that when it comes to net-wrapped bales, they always hold together when transporting or moving from one location to another. Many farmers have used twine for many of years but are changing over to net because of these reasons. There's no right or wrong answer when it comes to choosing net vs twine. The key is to understand your cost, time in labor and fuel, and your commitment to minimize hay loss.

PRUSSIC ACID POISONING

Sudangrass, forage sorghums and sorghum-sudangrass crosses as well as Johnson grass (all in the genus Sorghum) are often planted for summer pasture and sometimes fed as green chop, silage, or hay. Under certain environmental conditions, especially drought stress, livestock may develop symptoms of prussic acid poisoning when these forage are pastured or fed as green chop. Death can result from prussic acid poisoning, most commonly when livestock have fed on plants that are very young, stunted by drought or frost. Cattle and sheep are more susceptible than swine since they are more likely to consume large quantities of the poison. The danger of prussic acid poisoning is greatest when livestock graze. The greatest number of livestock losses in the summer time occur when grazing drought stressed plants.

WHAT PRUSSIC ACID IS

Most of the prussic acid in plants exists as a bound, non-poisonous chemical called dhurrin. It is present in most sorghums, but some species and varieties contain less than others.

Also present in the sorghums is a material called emulsion, which under certain conditions can react with dhurrin to form prussic acid (also referred to as hydrocyanic acid). If plants are damaged, such as by freezing, chewing or trampling, the emulsion-dhurrin reaction is enhanced, freeing sufficiently larger quantities of poison (cyanide) to cause a potentially hazardous condition.

Prussic acid is extremely poisonous. A concentration greater than 0.1 percent of dry tissue is considered highly dangerous. The active compound is hydrocyanic acid (HCN). Since prussic acid poisoning is very fast-acting livestock death can occur very quickly. Watch animals closely for any signs of toxicity. Livestock can show symptoms of intoxication within 5 minutes of eating plants with the poison, and may die within 15 minutes. Symptoms of HCN poisoning are gasping, staggering, trembling muscles, convulsions, and death resulting from respiratory failure. The mucous membranes of the mouth and eyes may have a blue coloration as evidence of cyanosis. In cases of recovery, there appears to be no permanent effects.

In the sorghums, leaf blades normally contain higher prussic acid levels than leaf sheaths or stems, the heads are low in prussic acid, and the seeds contain none. Upper leaves have more prussic acid than older leaves. Tillers and branches ("suckers") have the highest levels, because they are mostly leaves and not stalk material. Also, young regrowth forage, especially sorghum and sorghum-sudangrass crosses, can be very toxic. As plants mature and plant height increases, the risk of prussic acid poisoning is reduced. However, during times of plant stress such as during drought or frost, toxicity can remain high in maturing plants. Hay may be dangerous when cut but becomes safe in time through volatilization of the HCN. Hay stored for two or more months gradually loses its cyanide potential.

Prussic acid can also be found in bahia, corn, cocklebur, white clover and other plants. One problem associated with prussic acid is that it tends to "come and go" in the plant. It may be present for a short time then dissipate.

The following are suggested guidelines when grazing sorghum and sudangrass varieties, crosses and hybrids:

- Do not graze plants in the sorghum family until they are 2-3 feet tall. Sorghum-sudangrass hybrids should be safe to graze of 36 inches or more unless they are drought stressed.

- Sorghum may not be safe to graze until fully headed. Regrowth sorghum should not be grazed until after the plant is completely killed by frost and died.

- Do not graze sorghum, sorghum-sudangrass hybrids or sudangrass during or after a drought, or if the plants show visible signs of moisture stress. Have the plants tested for toxicity levels before grazing.

- Do not graze short regrowth forage following hay or silage harvest or following a period of close grazing.

- Do not graze sorghum or sorghum-sudangrass hybrids following a series of light frosts, as the potential for poisoning increases for a short period of time after frosts. Allow 7 to 10 days to pass before grazing after a light frost.

- Do not graze sorghum or sorghum-sudangrass hybrids following a killing frost until the plant has dried, approximately 14 days.

- Do not graze hungry livestock on sorghum or sorghum-sudangrass hybrids. Poisoning potential increases with the amount of high-risk forage consumed. Try to fill up the livestock with hay/feed immediately prior to turning them in to fresh pastures/fields.

- Remove all livestock from the feed source when an animal is found to have died suddenly.

Mosquito Surveillance

Starting in the last two weeks of August, I had five locations that I put out mosquito traps throughout the county. The objective of this applied research is to see which of the two kinds of mosquito we have in Callahan County. The two kinds that we were looking for are the Aedes aegypti (yellow fever mosquito) and Aedes albopictus (Asian tiger mosquito). These two mosquito carries various diseases and viruses. The Asian tiger mosquito especially carries the Zika virus.

On the surveillance, traps were put out on Monday afternoon with a five-inch piece of paper attached to the inside of the cup. The cup was filled with water up two to three inches which allowed mosquito to lay their eggs in the cup. Five cups were placed at different area within five different locations in the County.

Locations for the surveillance were at Cross Plains, Clyde, Putman, and two locations in Baird.

The surveillance was mostly done within the city limits or just a little bit outside of the cities. On Thursday morning, all mosquito traps were picked up and the paper was removed from the cups. While pulling the paper out, it allowed the eggs to stick to the paper and then it was sent to Stephenville to be evaluated. Both these species lay eggs that are different in shape in size which allows us to know what kind of mosquito we have here in Callahan County. After three weeks of surveillance, both the yellow fever and Asian tiger mosquitos are in Callahan County. Please don't be alarmed with this finding. Majority of counties in Texas have both kinds of mosquitoes. A couple of our neighboring counties north of us have only one kind.

Always take precaution when it comes to working outdoors or your children playing outside.

Make sure to dump unwanted water, keep your yard well-manicured, wear long sleeve shirts and pants, have some form of mosquito repellent to keep these pest from biting you.

Busy Week at the Museum

What a great week this has been at the Robert E. Howard Museum.

Tom and Yoshiko Neeley of Texarkana, Arkansas were on their way to South Texas to attend a wedding and had arranged ahead for a tour of the museum. Tom along with being a long time Howard fan, is employed in the water department with the city of Texarkana. The highlight of their tour was discovering that Howard's writings are published in Japan. Yoshiko was delighted to be able to read from a Conan story in her native language.

Next came a great surprise. Michael Chabon, Pulitzer Prize-winning author of The Amazing Adventures of Kavalier & Clay and Wonderboys, of Berkeley California was in Dallas to speak as a part of Arts & Letters Series at the Dallas Museum of Art and found that he had a few hours to spend before his scheduled appearance. He called and checked the distance and determined he had enough time to make it to Cross Plains and back.

He has long been interested in Howard's writings and was pleased to visit the small town where he grew up and tour the house where he lived and wrote.

The following day came Douglas Cole of Connecticut, currently a student at University of Texas in Arlington, where he is majoring in history. He had discovered Howard while reading Conan comic books.

Needing a subject for a term paper he decided, since he was studying in Texas, he would write about a Texas author, Robert E. Howard. A great place to start was to visit his former home in Cross Plains, which is now a museum and see where all those Conan stories were written.

He left Cross Plains very pleased with all the information he was able to gather.

Cross Plains Students Are Set To "Read for the Record" on October 19th

Kindergarten and first grade students will once again participate in Jumpstart's premiere national campaign Read for the Record®, presented in partnership with the Pearson Foundation, thanks to the Cross Plains Public Library.

Read for the Record® is one day of the year when millions of individuals come together to celebrate literacy and support Jumpstart in its efforts to promote early childhood education. On Thursday, October 19th, people across the country will be encouraged to read the children's book "Quackers" by Liz Wong, in support of Jumpstart's mission to work towards the day that every child in America enters school prepared to succeed.

Cross Plains' kindergarten and first grade teachers will read the book to their students that day, and thanks to a friend of the library, the Cross Plains Public Library received funds to purchase a copy of the book for each student to take home.

In 2006, Jumpstart launched the first Read for the Record® campaign with the classic story "The Little Engine That Could." Jumpstart began the morning of that campaign day on NBC's TODAY Show, which has become a proud tradition. Jumpstart's supporters helped set a new record for reading the same book on the same day, and in the process, created a national forum for concerned citizens to voice their support of early education.

We hope you'll help us break the record by joining us to read "Quackers" on October 19th!

Peggy Dickson was the winner of the red, white and blue Patriotic Quilt created by the Cross Plains Quilting Club for the Cancer Walk.
