

County farmers urged to get spraying permits

AUSTIN — It's the time of year when pesticide applicators start using regulated herbicides on crop and pasture land. If spraying will occur in one of the state's 66 regulated counties, applicators must obtain a permit from the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"The Texas Herbicide Law requires applicators to have the permit in hand before they can begin spraying," said Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry.

The herbicide law gives counties the option of being regulated. The decision is made by the commissioner's court and enforced by TDA.

Regulation provides additional restrictions on the use of five regulated herbicides and their derivatives, mainly to help prevent adverse effects from occurring on sensitive vegetation. In regulated counties, herbicides cannot be sprayed when the wind exceeds 10 miles per hour.

Regulated herbicides, which include 2, 4-D, control broad-leaf target plant species and have the potential to damage valuable non-target plant species and have the potential to damage valuable non-target crops if care isn't taken to prevent drift of the chemical and its vapor.

"Texas agriculture is so diverse, a herbicide being sprayed to control mesquite or pasture woods might drift onto cotton, soy beans, or another crop, causing extensive loss," Perry said. "The permit requirement acts as an added safeguard to prevent this from happening."

To apply for a permit, applicators should contact the nearest TDA regional office. TDA recommends that applicators apply for the permit up to two weeks before spraying will take place. TDA has the authority to approve, deny, modify or revoke a permit.

If the pesticide staff questions an application, a pesticide specialist may inspect the application site before making a decision. Allowing ample time for processing will eliminate any reason for delaying the permit.

ENMU announces implementation of academic changes

PORTALES—Eastern New Mexico University is implementing changes in its academic offerings as a result of its Assessment program.

The goal of Assessment is simple: to see if Eastern students are learning what the faculty and administrators believe is being taught. The process of discovering what the students learned and analyzing the results turned out to be a full-time job, so Eastern established the Assessment Resource Office, headed by Dr. Alec Testa, in the fall of 1994.

Eastern began its Assessment program in 1987 when it first administered the COMP (College Outcomes Measures Program). This test was given to freshmen during their first semester, and then again during their junior year to determine how much they had learned compared to what they already knew as beginning freshmen.

In 1993, Eastern switched from using the COMP test to the CAAP (Collegiate Assessment of Academic Performance) test. This test eliminates the need for freshmen to take the test, as a junior's scores can be compared to his or her ACT or SAT scores. According to Dr. Patrice Caldwell, dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the CAAP format was easier to link to a student's grades in general education classes like math, science, and English.

The process of Assessment has now expanded and is being applied to the various disciplines within each college. By HEREFORD — Muleshoe's Varsity and Junior Varsity track teams participated in the Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce Invitational Track Meet on March 24-25. They finished sixth overall out of nine teams in the competition.

One of the highlights of the day was Jesus Flores' first relay to finish fourth for the Muleshoe team.

Others having an exceptional day included Daniel Garbarino who finished second in the triple jump, fourth in the 110 high hurdles, and tied for 4th in the high jump. This was a personal best for the year according to Coach Johnson.

The Gift

Seems like I ride a lot of borrowed horses. At folks ranches or trail rides, ropings or brandings they mount me 'cause I'm usually a long way from home. I often bring my own saddle. They offer to lend me a saddle as well, but AI decline for personal reasons. Sometimes it's the only way I can find my horse!

In the morning' when we saddle, I kinda hang back till the bunch picked through and then see if I can spot anything familiar. After lunch I wander down the picket line lookin' for my saddle.

My daughter and I buy a few ol' gummies every spring to calve out on our little patch of grass. She checks 'em every day a horseback and we run 'em all summer. I can ride out in the pasture in August, look 'em over, come back in the house and not remember what they look like. She can describe cows from five years ago!

I figger it's a gift.

Like some people can draw, some can sing and some can fit a steer. There are some people who can look at a horse colt at two years of age and pick that sucker outta the string twelve years later. Or recognize a cow comin' through the chute out of a herd of four hundred. Or a steer in the ropin' box. "He drags a little."

I used to think that they were puttin' me on or show talkin' to impress folks. But I'm convinced there are horsemen and cow people who dang sure really know that animal.

If I set my mind to it I can make a point of checkin' the animal out. Does he have three white stockings, is his tail black, did his ears get froze off, does he have one eye! Then I might remember him for a day or two.

Maybe it's just lack of attention on part...not payin' attention to details. But I've always been like this. I've never seen a memory course for cowboys with my problem. But I'm sure I'm not the only one. It could begin with a few basics, i.e. sex, number of legs, species, color, broken limbs, tuberculosis, blindness.

But I'm convinced a person with the gift sees more than just physical characteristics. They see personality, movement, ability, potential...they see the individual. They see. They just don't look.

I admire them. I envy their gift. I wish I had part of it. But I guess I just have to be thankful that my dog remembers me and the family cat has three legs.

National Blue Ribbon Week, April 2-7, to generate greater awareness of child abuse

The color red symbolizes the awareness of AIDS...green symbolizes the protection of our environment. But what color calls attention to the need for protecting children when they have been abused or neglected?

The color blue symbolizes the nearly three million children reported each year to Child Protective Service (CPS) agencies throughout the United States as being victims of abuse. In an effort to address this problem, the week of April 2-8, is being recognized as "National Blue Ribbon Week," to kick-off April, National Child Abuse Prevention Month.

Hundreds of communities across the country are banding together to create greater public awareness of child abuse through the Quarters for Kids Blue Ribbon Campaign, sponsored by The National Exchange Club and The National Exchange Club Foundation for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

Blue ribbon lapel pins are being distributed to the public by Exchange Club members to symbolize the tragedy of child abuse and what can be done to prevent it. This nationwide effort is a result of an action taken by a concerned grandmother after experiencing the death of her grandson.

In 1989, Bonnie Finney, Norfolk, Va., took a stand against child abuse and tied a blue ribbon to her van as a symbol of her personal commitment to stop child abuse. The death of her grandson was tragic, and inspired Bonnie's message to the rest of the country:

"The blue ribbon serves as a constant reminder to fight for protection of our children. We must protect our most precious gift of all...our children. Please put one on your car... give one to your friends... tell them what it means... You may be saving a child's life," said Bonnie Finney.

Since Bonnie's involvement with the blue ribbon program, many child advocacy organizations have participated in this movement. The National Exchange Club and The National Exchange Club Foundation for the Prevention of Child Abuse want to increase this participation by asking everyone concerned about the welfare of children to wear a blue ribbon, not only during National Blue Ribbon Week, but year-round.

Exchange's national Quarters for Kids Blue Ribbon project is a three-year campaign focusing on distributing 3 million blue ribbon pins, one million per year.

Each pin represents a case of child abuse reported last year. Proceeds from the campaign benefit each participating community, as well as the National Exchange Club Educational Foundation and The National Exchange Club Foundation for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

Please show support for child abuse prevention. To order blue ribbon pins, or for more information on how individuals, organizations and communities can participate in National Blue Ribbon Week, call the Foundation at 800/XCHANGE or (419) 535-3232. Millions of children are counting on us.

Scientific American Frontiers "It's a Kid's World"

Kids. They're sweet, mischievous, rowdy, inquisitive, and amazing — sometimes all at once! Far from the notion that prevailed until the 20th century, children are not just little adults, but a unique link in the chain of human evolution. The wondrous process by which children develop is explored in "It's a Kid's World" on Scientific American Frontiers.

Hosted by Alan Alda, the one-hour "It's a Kid's World" looks at movement, perception, and language ability, as well as the time-old topic of the way kids think. Until they are about four years old, children don't seem able to grasp more than one world perspective. When children make the intellectual leap to recognizing a universe of differing viewpoints, they experience a totally new spectrum of behaviors from empathy to deception.

"It's a Kid's World" on Scientific American Frontiers airs Wednesday, March 29th at 8:00 p.m. on KENW-TV. The program will repeat Saturday, April 1st at 7:00 a.m.

Los Misioneros (The Missionaries)

Los Misioneros, a half-hour documentary, takes a look at the struggles of the poor south of the border and what some citizens of New Mexico and Texas are doing to help.

Believers Faith, a non-profit U.S. organization founded in 1982, travels almost every other week into Mexico and to parts of Central and South America. Their mission is to provide food, clothing, medical supplies, and spiritual help to those most in need.

In April of 1991, a KENW-TV crew traveled with these missionaries to Juarez, Mexico, a frequent stopping point. The missionaries distributed supplies to residents living in cardboard housing areas. From here, the missionaries traveled south to the Copper Canyons of Mexico—Tarahumara country.

The Tarahumara Indians, native to this land and still very primitive, farm the mountain tops, growing corn and beans. The unpredictable weather often plays havoc with their crops. For years now, this handful of missionaries have traveled to this remote region with food and clothing in an effort to help their less fortunate neighbors to the south.

For many of the missionaries, their dedication to helping the poor over the years has evolved into a full-time effort. This special documents one of their many humanitarian journeys south of the border.

Los Misioneros, a KENW-TV production, will air Thursday, March 30th at 10:00 p.m.

Minding your own business

By Don Taylor

A Trek in Wisconsin

We may start a new business craze in rural American with this column. I'm going to tell you about a very successful barn-based business. At least it started out that way.

You wouldn't guess that a $300 million a year international manufacturer of quality bicycles would start in a barn. However, that is exactly how it happened with TREK Bicycle Corp. of Waterloo, Wis.

In 1976, with a payroll of only five, TREK began to produce hand-built bicycle frames in a rented barn. How the company grew from such a humble beginning is, as Paul Harvey would say, "The rest of the story."

Build Quality

Recently, it was my pleasure to meet and present workshops to more than 120 TREK bicycle dealers from all around the world. In the first few hours

I spent with them, it became obvious that these independent business owners were a cut above. They were sharp, interested in learning and certainly open to new ideas. They had come to this meeting with every intention of learning how to build a more successful business and serve their customers effectively.

The quality of these dealers, their attitude and their commitment to improvement raised some questions in my mind. Why were they so motivated? Why were they focused on quality and improvement? Why had they, in some cases, traveled thousands of miles to learn?

The answers became clear as I spent more time with TREK employees. They are a class group of folks. They share a commitment to build quality products with competitive prices that are always delivered on time. Their positive attributes and uncompromising service have attracted quality dealers. Quality attracts quality and like begets like.

Keys to Success

I identified five key elements in TREK's success story. I believe these are sound principles on which to grow any company. It doesn't matter whether you are barn-based, home-based or main street situated, you can benefit by focusing on these basics.

* Quality. TREK's philosophy is that companies don't build bikes, people do. Their people build them by hand, one at a time. From design to testing, materials selection to assembly, quality is the driving force. It works. The commitment to quality has earned TREK the "Best in Industry" service award from Bicycle Dealer Showcase for four consecutive years.

* Value. Not once in the meeting did I hear any TREK employee or dealer complain about not having the lowest price. This is not a price driven company. They understand that people buy value, not the lowest price. They provide solid quality with outstanding service at a competitive price. Their customers equate this to value.

* People. The company works hard to provide a positive working environment. Though employees are serious about serving customers well, TREK is a fun company to work for. Most employees are bicycle enthusiasts. They love their work and it shows.

* Customer Focused. Whether a serious racer or weekend wobbler, every customer is taken seriously. All TREK bicycles are designed with the end user in mind. Their goal is not to sell you a bicycle, but rather to sell you the "exactly right" bicycle.

* Deliver. Deliver what you promised, when you promised, as you promised. Success at TREK is in the details. There are business experts who advocate not sweating the small stuff, but inattention to small stuff can take you out of business. Deliver the details and keep your promises.

Do you get the feeling I was impressed by this American dream success story? You're right. I was impressed. American ingenuity is alive and well. Americans can still compete with anyone in the world. If you don't believe me, take a trek to Wisconsin, or take a TREK around the block.
