HESS URGES HOME FEEDERS

Proprietor of Farm at Waterloo, Ia., Puts Forth Argument.

Waterloo, Ia., June 26.—One of the strongest arguments for the growing of feeders at home is given by H. J. Hess, proprietor of the Quietdale herd of Aberdeen-Angus cattle.

His financial statement on the cattle follows: Purchased Oct. 13, 1910 at Waterloo, Ia., 194 steers, $5,250.00.

Loss on 194 head, $1,221.99. "I figured that the droppings made into pork by the hogs, with the manure put on the farm, would balance the labor item, and have not figured these items in the account."

The cattle were good quality bred, but were very wild at first and made slaughter expenses at the start because of this disposition.

Commenting on the change of conditions, Mr. Hess echoes the views of that America's Greatest Farm Daily has been predicting for the last few years.

One of the People
By Mary Wood Ayres

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

DICK CARTON was tall, broad shouldered and good to look upon. Perhaps that is why the head waitress gave him one of the choice tables, at the end of the room, where he could have an uninterrupted view of the guests. If so, the favor was unappreciated. He was also quite oblivious of the fact that he had the prettiest waitress in the room. In his busy life mealtime had come to mean so many additional minutes for reading, and he never neglected the opportunity.

But today, looking up from the finish of a rather dry government bulletin, his glance was caught by the carriage of a girl who came down the room lightly balancing a tray on one hand. "She could carry it just as easily on her head," he thought, admiringly. "She is from the Smokies surely."

As she was bringing his own order he soon had a nearer view. Her face seemed familiar.

"Haven't I seen you some place before?" he asked, in his abrupt way.

"Sure you have, Mr. Carton."

He started.

She smiled and explained: "I went to the Forbes-Stanton school, and you made the speech when I graduated."

It was the mountain school where he himself had studied.

"I am Kitty Ralston."

He knew the Ralstons. Some of them lived not ten miles from his father's farm. He was at once interested. "How did you happen to come down here?"

Kitty flushed a deep red. "I thought perhaps you had heard. I ran off to Valletown to marry Dan Phelps. Sally Husted was with me. Dan—he never showed up. Sally—she went home, but I just couldn't stand to do it. I had enough money

Kitty flushed a deep red. "I thought perhaps you had heard. I ran off to Valletown to marry Dan Phelps. Sally Husted was with me. Dan—he never showed up. Sally—she went home, but I just couldn't stand to do it. I had enough money to come here. It's been six months now." There was a glint of tears in her eyes as she gathered up some dishes and started up the room.

Dick knew the mountain custom of cloping, even when there was no opposition to the match. Had not his own father and mother slipped off to this same Valletown? Sometimes, too he knew the courage of one or the other failed at the last moment. But generally the breach was patched up and they made a second and more successful attempt. So thinking, he opened another treatise and speedily forgot the incident.

Her cheerful "Good morning, Mr. Carton," at the next meal came as a fresh surprise. The six months at Asheville had smoothed off most of the venacular from her speech, but she still had some of the mountain twang that he loved. They had worked other changes. Even careless Dick Carton detected in her hair and dress a smartness unknown to the mountain girls. As she walked up the room her cheeks rosy and her head held high several of the men gave her admiring glances. A frown gathered between the eyes of the pathologist. A public dining room was no place for a mountain girl.

During the next few days they had many an interrupted fragment of conversation. Dick told her the news in his home letters, and her eyes grew wistful.

"Why don't you go home, Kitty?" he asked earnestly.

"I couldn't stand it." She turned abruptly to answer the sally of a man at the next table. Evidently he said something complimentary, but the girl only tossed her head and laughed.

Carton watched them with increasing irritation. Why did not Dan Phelps come and fetch her?

The Phelps boys, as he knew them, were a bad lot. The women did the work while the men loafed and drank moonshine whisky. Never by any chance had he seen one of them in the audience when he traveled with the state agricultural demonstration car. Dan, he could not remember. Perhaps he was better than the rest of his clan. At least the girl had loved him.

Dick ate rapidly, his books untouched beside his plate. A brilliant plan was formulating in his mind. He would send Dan the money to come and get his girl. Saturday was free. He would arrange to meet Dan, bring him to Kitty, and see them married.

That night, on a train going north, he wrote the letter to Dan, and then tried to dismiss the matter from his mind.

Saturday morning he was on hand, eagerly scanning the passengers for the Murphy train. In the tall fellow who slouched out of the smoker, he knew his bridegroom. He had the dark beauty often seen among the mountain boys, although his few years of manhood had already tarnished it with signs of dissipation. It was, however, too late to stop. Briefly introducing himself, he hurried Dan up the street to the Pleasant View hotel.

Kitty was setting the tables in the dining room, a bellboy informed them. Two girls were laughing and talking at the table. The taller one raised her head. It was Kitty. She clutched the back of a chair and her face whitened.

"I have brought Dan, Kitty," Carton explained, with a vague sense of uneasiness.

The color had come back to Kitty's cheeks. Her eyes gleamed dangerously. "You—brought—Dan," contemptuously. "Well, you might have saved yourself the trouble."

"But he wants to marry you," he persisted awkwardly.

"Marry him?" she flashed back. "I wouldn't marry him if he were the last man on earth. A nice sort of a husband he'd make for me!"

"You mind what you say, Kitty Ralston," Dan began angrily.

Kitty never gave him a glance. "And you thought I would take him, when I had talked to you and you know how I felt. You—" She burst into tears.

The other waitress stepped up quickly and put her arms around the sobbing girl. "I think you had both better go away," she said severely.

"I never imagined she would take it this way," Carton exclaimed ruefully, when they were once more on the street.

"Might have known," Dan said sullenly. "Kitty always was a spitfire."

"Perhaps she will feel differently tomorrow," Dick suggested. "I can't understand it."

"Looks to me as if Kitty might be sweet on you. I'm done with her for good. I'll just knock round a while to see the sights and then I'll make for home." Turning on his heel he walked up the street.

The abashed state pathologist remained for some moments stupidly staring after him.

Kitty was not in the dining room the next morning, nor the next, nor the next. Carton's uneasiness increased from day to day. To what desperate measures had he forced her? Or perhaps she was ill? Either alternative was disquieting. At length he resolved to consult one of the waitresses.

It was near the end of the dining hour, and the waitress was free from guests. The waitresses congregated in little knots, talking. To his disturbed conscience they seemed to watch him furtively. Plucking up his courage, he beckoned to the nearest one.

"Where is Kitty Ralston?"

"She has gone away." The girl spoke meaningly, and he recognized her as the sole witness of the unfortunate Saturday's encounter.

He gave a little sigh of relief. "O, then you know about it." His tone was so miserable that the girl relented.

"Kitty was afraid you might bring that fellow back, so she left."

"But where has she gone?" he persisted eagerly.

The waitress eyed him sharply. "If I were you I would not hunt her up unless—she hesitated—"unless you like her pretty well."

"But why, why?" Carton stammered, the blood rushing to his face.

"Because Kitty likes you. Didn't she hang over your table the blessed time you were in the room? Didn't she turn color if you as much as spoke to her? Anyone but a man would have seen it." The scorn of her tone was inexpressible.

His head whirled. Kitty loved him. And he—and he—like one in a dream he heard himself saying, "And if I do like her?"

"Then she is at the Bixby hospital, starting a course in trained nursing."

He made straight for the telephone booth, and then caught a car to the hospital. All the way his heart was singing. In his chosen work of teaching the mountain folk how to farm he would have a loving helpmate, he would have one of his people.

Modesty Rebuked.

Booker T. Washington, after a certain brilliant and powerful oration, was standing on the platform of a railway station when a newsboy strode up to him.

"Here 'yare, boss!" he said. "Herd 'ald extra! Booker Washington's great speech! Only 2 cents!"

"Nonsense, boy!" said the noted teacher. "That speech isn't worth 1 cent!"

"Ah, go on—jealous!" said the boy angrily. "What do you know about it?"

The Reason.

FLAX RAISING IN KANSAS.
Agricultural College Experiments Have Proved Satisfactory.

Manhattan, Kan., June 27.—Prof. W. M. Jardine, professor of agronomy in the Kansas State Agricultural College, writes as follows concerning flax raising in Kansas:

The annual production of flax for the United States usually is about 26,000,000 bushels. The crop of 1910 was little more than 8,000,000 bushels. Because of this shortage the price of flaxseed has advanced at least $1 a bushel; it is now selling for about $2.50 a bushel. The average normal price for Kansas is $1.10 a bushel. In 1910, according to Secretary Coburn, Kansas produced in round numbers 467,000 bushels of flax. The acreage planted in 1909, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, was 55,000, the average yield being 7 bushels.

According to experiments conducted at the experiment station at Manhattan with many different varieties of flax, from every section of the country, with different dates and rates of seeding, flax can be grown profitably in this state. Of twenty-four varieties tested the yield varied from zero to 12 bushels to the acre. As a rule local varieties, provided the seed was well up and pure, gave better results than introduced seed. Early planting, that is, during the last week in March to the second week in April, proved most satisfactory than earlier or later planting. From 20 to 35 pounds of seed an acre gave larger yields than after the larger amounts. From our results we conclude that Kansas grown seed, is to be preferred to foreign grown seed, that 20 to 35 pounds of pure, wholesome seed is sufficient to plant to the acre, and that early seeding gives best results.

Flax Requires Good Care.
Flax requires very good care, especially with respect to seed-bed preparation. Ordinarily the land should be fall plowed and worked into a firm uniform seed-bed as early as possible in the spring. Or, if it is impossible to plow in the fall, then flax, ordinarily, will do well if planted on corn ground after the corn stalks have been cut and removed from the field and the land double disked and harrowed previously to plowing. Better plant the seed on corn ground without plowing, unless the plowing can be done in the fall. If spring plowing is necessary on stubble land of any kind it should be done shallow and packed as firmly as possible at once.

Flax does well on virgin sod newly turned over. The common practice in the Northwest is to plant flax on prairie sod broken out in the spring. This practice can be followed in Kansas to good advantage. The seed-bed, however, should be thoroughly prepared whether it be on newly broken sod or whether it be after some other crop. In other words, if it is the purpose of the farmer to plant on prairie sod, he should be thoroughly disked, harrowed and packed previously to planting. Flax would be a good crop to plant on newly broken pasture land, clover land or alfalfa land. The only danger in planting on clover and alfalfa land will be that the flax is likely to grow so rank that it might possibly lodge, but with proper care and handling this danger can be eliminated to a considerable extent.

There is no reason why flax can not be grown with profit in western Kansas if it succeeds in the Dakotas, Wyoming and Montana. Early seeding should be practiced, however, to take advantage of the most favorable soil moisture conditions and to ripen the crop before the hot, dry winds of July. The hot, dry winds that sometimes prevail during the blossoming season for flax are the greatest drawback to flax culture in Kansas.

Early Planting Advised.
The earlier this crop can be brought to maturity the less danger there will be from this factor, hence early planting is advised. Flax is not susceptible to frost except as it is just coming through the ground. If it escapes at this stage there will be little likelihood of damage from frost thereafter.

Flax is a crop that requires considerable moisture in its early growth, hence the land should be prepared with this point in mind. In other words, the farmers who expect to grow flax should plan their rotations and the preparation of their soil some time in advance of the planting time to bring forward as much moisture in the soil as possible. Especially will this be true for Western Kansas, where the rainfall is limited.

Flax can be well utilized in a rotation with alfalfa, clover, grasses, corn and wheat. It should never be grown two years in succession on the same soil. Always treat the seed with the formalin treatment before planting. This can be done in the same manner that wheat is treated. A regular grain drill, preferably with press wheel attachment, is to be preferred for seeding flax, though good results are being obtained from broadcasting and light harrowing or disking the land thereafter. The crop should be harvested when the bolls begin to turn brown. Threshing should be done as soon as possible after harvest. The seed can be cut either with the binder or with the header. The latter method will probably be cheaper and equally as effective otherwise.

HOW TO SAVE $3,000,000.

The taxpayer should not lose sight of the fact that the $5,000,000 capitol proposition, carrying with it the added burden of $1,500,000, only requires a bare majority to carry it at the November election, 1912, while the three and one-half million dollar proposition, representing a saving over the five million dollar plan of $1,500,000 in principal and $1,500,000 in interest, requires two-thirds majority to carry August 1. Get busy, boys, and let's save this three millions by putting the necessary two-thirds into the ballot box at the special election.

WHO SHOULD VOTE "YES."

These should go to the polls on August 1 and work and vote for the now capitol proposition:

All who favor the present permanent seat of government, magnificent in its scenic beauty, splendid in its historical setting, and sacred in its traditions and reminiscences.

All who oppose opening the question of capitol removal, frittering away the time and money and patience of the people in schemes that can never receive the approval of the voters.

All who favor rebuilding the capitol now and not dragging the matter over the tortuous routes of controversy for a dozen years.

All who believe that 3 1/2 million dollars will rebuild an adequate, fire-proof capitol.

All who favor saving $1,500,000 in principal and $1,500,000 in interest—the additional amount the five million dollar proposition will cost.

All who would have Missouri receive the benefit of the advertisement of progress and enterprise that the prompt rebuilding of the capitol would bring.

All who are patriotic enough to take pride in a splendid new state house, built of Missouri stone and material produced by Missourians.

All who love the grand old state and would not see her lag behind her sister states in the matter of civic improvement.

All who think we need a capitol building at all and are big enough and generous enough to be willing to pay the pittance required to build it.

FIRST CARICATURE OF BONEY

It Was Produced When Napoleon Was Yet at the Military Academy at Brienne.

Napoleon in caricature is one of the most prolific of subjects. Indeed European political caricature from 1793 until 1815 may be said to have been Napoleon.

The cartoon, which was drawn by a schoolmate, represents the future emperor standing, a severe and determined look upon his face, with both hands on the top of a musket, resting the butt on the ground.

KEEPIING THE STREETS CLEAN

HE PRAYED FOR LUCY GRAY

Suggestions of New York Man for Securing Pure Air in the Large Cities.

William Van V. Hayes of New York presents suggestions for improving the care of the streets in New York so as to secure pure air.

HE PRAYED FOR LUCY GRAY

Bashful Young Curate Didn't Know Object of Solitude Was Entry in Steeplechase.

How to win the hearts of his congregation was unconsciously solved by an innocent young curate, Dean Hole, in his "Letters," tells the following story:

KOSHER KITCHEN IN SCHOOL

In the Jewish District of New York Food is Especially Prepared for Pupils.

Six hundred and thirty Jewish children of New York had luncheon the other day for the small sum of three cents each at the opening of the new kosher kitchen just installed in public school No. 92.

The idea is to determine whether children suffer from malnutrition and whether serving lunch at cost price in the school buildings will tend to raise the standard of scholarship in the Jewish district.

Before school each morning brass checks good for one full meal are sold in the school yard. At nine o'clock word is sent to the cook as to the number of luncheons that will be required at noon.

Many of the children come from homes where the mothers work out by the day and there is no one to prepare the luncheon should they go home for it.

DRINKING WELLS

The study of various methods of preventing inundations to which French engineers have been led by the disastrous floods in the basin of the Seine last winter has brought to light a very curious plan for disposing of surplus water which has been employed during the last five years by the count of Beauchamp on his extensive estates between Poitiers and Avallon.

ALWAYS EXCUSES

Col. Edward H. R. Green, discussing business success at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, said:

"The man who succeeds is the man who does what he sets out to do—not the man who makes excuses. Excuses are cheap and easy, but success is hard and rare. Excuses, though, we meet everywhere. Only yesterday, in a downtown restaurant, they gave me a tough chicken."

RIGHTS OF THE CHILD

Mrs. E. R. Weeks of Kansas City, well known in club circles of Missouri, was elected one of the vice-presidents of the Mothers' congress.

MODESTY

Robinson (of the city)—What a modest man Maddox-Jones is! I've known him for years and never knew till he told me just now that he exhibits at the Royal academy.

MUSIC IS AUDIBLE BEAUTY

Its Charm Results From the Marriage of a Spiritual Fact With a Material Form.

Music is both body and soul, like the man who delights in it. Its body is beauty in the sphere of sound—audible beauty. But in this very word beauty is implied a soul, a moral end, a meaning of some sort, which makes it of interest to the inner life of man.
