FAT STEERS RULE FIRM

LESS SNAP ON CERTAIN KINDS-GOOD YEARLINGS IN UR-GENT DEMAND.

TOP BEEVES LAND AT $6.75

Cows and Heifers Uneven-Bulls Clear on Steady Basis-Calves Unchanged-Stockers and Feeders Firm.

Beef cattle trade was not such a high flying affair as that of Wednesday, but it was still a good market as compared with Monday. A fair run of cattle got in today, estimates on the supply ranging from 1800 to 2000 head, as compared with 2,887 a week ago and 1,539 a year ago. The five markets combined had a supply aggregating 17,800 as against 24,000 a week ago and 14,600 a year ago.

There was some diversity of opinion regarding the status of the fat steer trade today. Some of those who got out yesterday on the extreme high spots were quoting prices a trifle easier. On the other hand salesmen who cashed in their holdings yesterday at the general advance of 10@15c, or those who did not have anything to sell on yesterday's unevenly higher market, willingly voted it a very good market today. General opinion was that prices today were easily 15@25c higher than Monday on the bulk of plain to good medium to strong weight steers, with desirable yearling material 25@40c higher than the opening day of the week. Keen demand for useful and attractive grades of yearlings strongly featured the trade today and prices were generally strong to 10c higher than yesterday.

Cattle came in in pretty good season today and there was a fairly active tone to the trade, bulk of the steers offered being out of first hands at noon. Top steers sold at $7.65.

The following prices on steers are quotable on the St. Joseph market:

Choice to prime, $7.50@8.25; good to choice, $7.25@7.50; fair to good short-fed, $6.35@6.55; common to medium, $5.65@6.35.

COWS, BULLS AND MIXED.

There was some unevenness to the market for cows and heifers today. Receipts were moderate and compara-tively light in proportion to other catthe. Yearling stuff was wanted, all buyers putting up a scramble for light fat heifers and mixed classes, with prices ruling strong to 10c higher than yesterday, or 25@40c higher in extreme cases as compared with opening day of the week. Some choice heifers of desirable weight were put over in the early part of the session at $6.25@ 6.50. Mixed lots ranged even higher. There was quieter tone to the trade in cows. Salesmen were inclined to quote a little weakness in cows as compared with yesterday's highest level, parad with yesterday's highest level, although traders generally conceded an advance of 15@25c over Monday's quotations on the arnk and file of the butcher and dressed beef cows. Best cows ranged from $5.40@6.25.

Bulls met a good reception today, clearing readily at firm prices. No change of consequence was noted in vealer trade. Receipts of calves were light and demand good at steady light and demand good at steady

PITY THE SPRING POET.

This weather is certainly tough on certain bipeds who are prone to burst forth into poetry about this time of year. Today the sun shines brightly and the poetic microbe gets busy. "Tomorrow" quoteth the poet, "I will dash off a few lines to the approach of spring, when the flowers bloom and all nature takes on a mantle of emerald hue and the robins and bluebirds twitter in the trees just bursting his children played." into new leaf." The morrow dawns and lo, big, feathery flakes of snow prizes amounting to more than $700 seeing vehicles in which to tour the come sifting down from the heavens.

Daddy's Bedtime

A Little Boy Whose Wish Came True

Like to Live There.

ADDY had put down a fat red book when the children came in to ask for their bedtime story. "What were you reading, daddy, dear?" questioned Evelyn, trying to get a peep into the book. "I was reading a story book," replied daddy.

"Then maybe you will tell us a story out of it," suggested Jack. "When you are old enough you will much better enjoy reading these stories yourself. They were written by one of the most delightful story tellers who ever lived, and, unlike most tales written for grownups, they can be enjoyed by boys and girls. I was only twelve years old when I read the first of his stories. Perhaps because this writer was always a boy at heart his stories are so readily understood by little people.

"I must tell you a story about him, "Little Charles-for his father was also Charles-was very fond of strolling about and looking at queer old churches and quaint buildings. The charming little boy in the blue suit with its wide white collar had a friendly way and would often stop and chat with the people he met,

"One day-it was when he was about nine years old-he stopped in front of a long, rambling house near the city of Rochester, England, where he then lived. His father had him by the hand and, pointing at the pretty house, little Charles said:

"There is the house where I would like to live.' It was a handsome Usual 20 per cent commission allowed ostmasters, who are authorized to take place known as Gadshill and quite beyond the means of the Dickens family. "'Very well, my son,' said the boy's father, 'Just keep that in mind and work hard. There is no reason why some day you may not live there.'

"The boy never forgot that. When he was sixteen his family needed his earnings, so he was taken from school and put into a lawyer's office, and from there he went to a newspaper. H s father was also a newspaper reporter. "By and by young Charles Dickens began to write stories, and they were such fine stories that soon every one was reading them. There were his stories about Mr. Pickwick and Sam Weller, about poor little Oliver Twist, the workhouse boy; about David Copperfield and about dear Little Nell. He wrote many others, but these, I think, are the stories that young people love best.

"His books brought him so much money that he was able to buy the house of his dreams, beautiful Gadshill. He went there to live with his wife and children, and he was fond of telling his friends how as a little boy he used to stand out at the gate staring longing; into the gardens where now

A Typographical Error

By Jane Ludlum Lee

"It's no use, Edna, the Lord never meant me to be very happy in this world. I'll have to take what I can get and be thankful."

Edna looked up with a bored expression. "Some people don't deserve even what they get."

The two girls were directly opposite types. Eleanor was tall, graceful, high strung, nervous, full of life and energy. Her most attractive features were her eyes, dark and deep set, with a longing, unsatisfied expression. Edna was a type much less interesting, cold, phlegmatic and near-sighted; a much smaller woman, too, with colorless gray eyes.

On the bed lay lingerie of the most alluring kind, the sort of things that only women can appreciate. Pile upon pile of lacy stuffs were scattered about the room. Negliges so attractive that one could almost wish for an illness as an excuse to wear them. Surrounded by these pretty things that women love, sat Eleanor Godfrey, who tomorrow would be the bride of Tom

"There's one thing I can never regret," she said. "I told Tom everything before he took me. It was brutally frank, I admit, to tell your future husband that the best love of your life has been given to another."

"Poor boy," murmured Edna. "Poor boy, indeed. Don't I have to live with him? Don't I have to see him waste his life? And is it nothing that I have to eke out an existence crushing down my sighs, forcing back my tears?"

Walking across the room to where Edna sat, she put her hands on a pair of very unsympathetic shoulders.

"How can you judge? You do not know the case. Now listen. Every breath I breathe, every prayer I utter, ever beat of my aching heart is for Jack Winston. I've loved him ever since I was a little girl, but you see I couldn't very well marry him because he never asked me. Then, too, Jack is so poor, and all my life I've been longing for things that Tom Grant's money will buy for me. I didn't debut he, still knowing this, wants to marry me and I accepted. Now judge wedding—merely a typographical erme if you will."

Edna straightened up a bit and the lines about her mouth seemed to grow deeper in an instant.

"One question, please, before I render the verdict. You take upon your soul the wrecking of this man's ex- ring?" istence. You will suck the honey was in love with some other girl?"

"I plead guilty to the charge, judge, and accept the sentence of the court. Your logic is getting stale; so let's go to bed that I may get my beauty sleep of it, dear girl, tomorrow at this hour Thomas Kemp Grant."

The lights were put out and Eleanor was soon fast asleep, while Edna lay wide awake, as though her brain ran the words "I do not love him and he knows it." If she only dared.

The next morning was colorless, the air heavy; in fact, just the sort of day to make a bride look out of the window and wonder if she really were superstitious. It was about 9 o'clock and Tom was whistling one minute and singing the next. He walked into the bedroom where his friend and best man lay peacefully sleeping.

"Get up, you lazy vagabond. We can't keep the bride waiting, you know That's her privilege."

The best man rubbed his eyes, growled a bit, and finally crawled out. "Guess I'll take a shower," he said. "Need some sort of a bracer to put me through this ordeal. I wouldn't do this for every fellow I know. Whisky," he went on, "as a bracer is far superior to water in my personal and valuable opinion, but the maid of honor might object. Better take one or the other yourself, old chap. You're looking pretty ragged for a bride threatened to give way. "I say, old man," he yelled at the bathroom door, "do you believe in presentiments?" "Bet I do," screamed the best man.

"What's that?" shricked Tom. A shaggy head appeared at the door and amid the soapsuds came this, "I've a presentiment that this is going to be a jolly cold proposition."

"What, my marriage?" "What a conceited ass you are, Tom. I had reference to my shower." The door closed just in time to receive a well-aimed boot. By 11 the men were ready and on their way to the house. As they neared it, Tom became more and more nervous. There seemed to be a weight on his heart that he could not lift. At that moment the best man was hanging out the cab window, cursing the driver for the snail-like pace they

The best man was about to rail at the Irish as a nation, when Tom said: "If anything should happen-"

"Jumping Jupiter, Tom, brace up. You look as if you had curvature of the spine. Pull yourself together, will you? Any girl that had such a looking object as you on her calling list would be ostracized by good society and one who would marry you would be declared mentally incompetent."

Benevolent Mule.

A farmer once bought a mule at the market and named it Tough Hide, for it looked as if it had been accustomed to more blows than food. He put the animal in his little clover field, and this it seemed to enjoy very much. One morning Tough Hide saw a troop of asses coming down the lane, looking rather thin. He asked them if they would like a nice feed of sweet clover. "Ah, wouldn't we!" brayed the asses.

So the mule with his teeth drew out the staple which fastened the gate and let them in. Soon after the farmer passed by, and saw the animals eating his clover, so he got a cudgel and drove them all out. He not only gave the asses a sound thrashing, but he thrashed Tough Hide as well. Moral.-Generosity is a good thing. but ought not to be practiced with other people's property.

Place of the Fireless Cooker. Even in this rich country, only one family in ten can afford to hire a cook, and in the far west such a person is seldom obtainable at any price. Now, by the fireless cooker all women who have to prepare their own meals will be emancipated from the hotstove slavery, which is particularly cruel in our-sultry summers. It makes it possible for them to cook breakfast, luncheon and dinner at the same time, in perhaps an hour, leaving the rest of the day free for other work. Broiling, steaming, stewing, baking, frying, roasting-everything, except crisping and toasting-can be done with these boxes in their most improved styles.-Century.

San Francisco, March 13 .- That the much knowledge and care as that good wine, is the statement of Professor Frederic T. Bioletti, of the University of California, in a bulletin issued on the manufacture of "Vinegar From Grapes." He said in part:

"The grape vinegar, if properly made, is far superior in quality to the vinegar that comes from distilled alcohol or the numerous waste products which at present are the source of the main bulk of the vinegar found in commerce. It is more expensive to manufacture, however, and cannot therefore compete in the open mar-ket in price. It must depend for sale on its high quality.
