UNFAVORABLE REPORTS FROM OUTSIDE MARKETS CREATED SLOW PULSE TO TRADE.

BEST STEERS ABOUT STEADY

General Run of Grassers Sold Weak to 10c Lower—Top Westerns $8.50—Cows and Heifers Firm—Stockers and Feeders Steady.

A fairly good Tuesday run of cattle showed up here today, comprising a lot of western steers, mostly Kansas-Panhandles and a mere handful of natives fit for the killer trade.

Buyers were again disappointed in the small supply of fed steers included in general marketing here today.

Trade in the general run of western steers opened slow this morning with buyers inclined to shade prices on all but top grades.

Following prices are available on the St. Joseph market today: Choice to prime steers, $7.50 to $8.50.

BEST WAYS TO MANIPULATE

Practical Instructions Given for Planting Crog, Gathering and Threshing, as Practiced in Oklahoma.

Tulsa, Okla., Sept. 2.—The value of cow peas as a stock feed crop is now firmly established and will grow in favor as they become more generally known.

The ideal thickness of planting is one seed every 2 or 3 inches in rows 3 feet apart.

Cowpeas should not be planted until the soil is thoroughly warmed up and all danger of frost or three weeks later than the regular corn-planting time.

The best method of threshing for a few acres is with the flail, and unless it is possible to get help, use a hand thrasher.

ROOM ON THE FARM.

Herbert Quick, editor of Farm and Fireside, writes an interesting article in the current issue of his periodical on living. Following is an extract:

"What we want to know is why there are not more people on the farms. I have just read in a magazine the explanation—they are all stirred up about it—that, all the available land is taken up. That is true if fencing, and owning, and cutting and overing is 'taking up.' But any farmer knows that there is room for twice, three times, as many people on the farms as are there now. I heard Mr. John W. Bookwalter of Springfield and the rest of the word read a paper on this subject last winter. He called the attention of his hearers to the rush of people to the cities as a great danger to the world—to civilization.

"He seemed to miss the effect he himself has had on this matter of the rush of people to the cities. Mr. Bookwalter possesses from $9,999 to 74,999 acres of farmland. On this immense domain there live probably from a thousand to fifteen hundred people. This is in Nebraska. In Nebraska, too, lives Arnold Martin, who on twenty-one acres makes money, besides supporting his family. If the land owned by Mr. Bookwalter were owned by the men who work it, there would be living on it three thousand ordinary Nebraska farm folk, instead of fifteen hundred people. If it were owned by men like Arnold Martin, there would be room for three thousand five hundred families, or say a population of fifteen thousand people on this same estate, which now supports perhaps fifteen hundred people on one-half the crops—and Mr. Bookwalter on the other half!

"What would be the effect of the cost of living if every tenant-farmer in these United States were all at once changed into an owner of his farm? Would it not change most of them into better farmers? It surely would. They would manure more heavily, establish better rotations, buy fertilizers, cease skinning the land, begin trying to make the piece adequate to the support not only of the old folks, but of the children."

REDUCING AUTO ACCIDENTS.

"Safety on the public highways depends, and must depend very largely upon the ability of the motorist to give adequate warning of the approach of his car. It is for this reason that statutes are being more vigorously enforced which require the automobilist to sound his horn at all obviously dangerous crossings and points where congestion of traffic may occur.

"The history of countless accidents has shown that failure to observe these requirements has contributed to more than a majority of the smash-ups and collisions which come before the public eye.

"Therefore, it would certainly seem that the day of the bulb horn is past. At best, this device—with its feeble, undependable 'honk'—is an absolutely inadequate warning signal. It has neither the power to warn at any distance, nor the consistency to perform its task in a uniform manner. It seems to delight in uttering any degree of sound which varies from a guttural cough to a wheeze of the staccato type. Surely, there can be no argument for such a contrivance when life and property are dependent upon the performance of its duty. It is the almost universal opinion of police officials and experienced motorists that the bulb-horn must go—and these two bodies form the last court of appeal on public highway regulation.

"The signal of the motor car must be imperative. It must be an uncompromising authoritative command—not a weak, apologetic gasp. The efficient signal must be ready for in-

Daddy's Bedtime Story

Why the Duck and Swan Moved

The Turtle Talking to the Swan.

JACK and Evelyn had been wondering if the swan and the duck were related. Daddy said they were. "In a quiet, shady stream a duck and a swan once made their homes. How they happened to come there doesn't matter, but they were not very good friends," daddy explained.

"You see, each had hoped to have the stream and all it held to himself, and he did not like to share those nice, juicy waterbugs and tadpoles with another.

"The waterbugs and worms and tadpoles and fish were of a mind in wishing both the swan and the duck away.

"How to get them away was something that none of them was able to decide. It was horrible to have Mr. Swan suddenly dart his long neck down to the bottom of the lake in the midst of a tadpole party or a waterbug tea. And Mr. Duck had an awful appetite.

"The young frogs had no peace after the swan came to live there, and, at last, things grew so bad that the frogs and fish and waterbugs and others said they would just have to move if the duck and swan didn't.

"That wouldn't be a bad idea," the turtle agreed, "but it's troublesome to move, and there may be easier ways."

"Mr. Turtle met first the duck, then the swan with a very pleasant good morning.

"Did you know that we are all talking of moving? Mr. Turtle remarked after a little chat.

"No, they had not heard, and they looked taken aback when told it.

"Yes, there is a nice, quiet pond in the south where all the waterbugs and worms and frogs and tadpoles may live happily. The man with the gun will soon be around here and so will the man with the fishing rod. We think it best to get out of their way. And now, my friend," the turtle whispered, "please don't say anything about it to any one else."

"Of course Mr. Duck and Mr. Swan promised to keep this a secret, and they did from one another, but the very next morning you might have seen each of them spreading his wings and hurrying south. Neither of them liked the man with the gun, and it would be of no use to stay around there if there was nothing for them to eat.

"And, of course, we were thinking of moving," Mr. Turtle explained afterward to his pond friends.

WHO GETS COAL RAKE-OFF

Government Will Look Into Fuel Cost Problem.

Washington, Sept. 2.—A report to disclose why it is profiting from the present high cost of coal is promised for the House of Representatives by the Department of Commerce and Labor on December 2 next. Secretary Nagel has designated Commissioner Charles F. Neill of the Bureau of Labor to investigate in conformity with the resolution adopted by the House shortly before adjournment.

Commissioner Neill has made several trips in search of investigation and upon his return September 10 it is expected he will have sufficiently explored the field so that the trained investigators railroad bureau may begin work to gather the desired details.

The principal object of the inquiry will be how much the cost of coal to the general consumer has been increased as a result of the recent strike in the anthracite coal region of Pennsylvania to which fields the inquiry was specially directed.

In a consideration of the resolution originally introduced by Representative Diffenderfer of Pennsylvania, it was said in the House Committee that the anthracite operators had added an increase of 25 cents a ton to the price of coal at retail.

In conjunction with the inquiry as to how much the price of coal was increased Commissioner Neill is expected to ascertain for what reason had by what means the cost was raised.

Another line of inquiry will be to determine how much and in what particulars the coal mines were benefited by the strike agreement. In support of the resolution it was argued the miners did not get nearly as the increase being paid by the general consumer.

Probably before the report is submitted to the House the Interstate Commerce Court of the United States will have handed down its decision now under consideration, as to the legal situation in the Pennsylvania anthracite coal fields.

These legal questions arise out of the suit brought by the government against an alleged combination of railroads and coal companies, charged with seeking to monopolize the coal trade in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Many points in the government's complaint had their origin in a former strike settlement about ten years ago. It has been urged at times that even in that settlement "the interest of organized capital and organized labor."

Hasty Pudding Recipe—Into two cups of beaten eggs stir two table-spoons flour and one-fourth teaspoon salt, moistened. Allow this mixture to cook slowly until it is a thick cream. Then add two beaten eggs and one cup sugar (the eggs and sugar beaten together). Let it cook slowly for about five minutes, or until thick and creamy; when cold add any flavoring desired. For a last touch, add two large ripe bananas sliced. (Do not cook the bananas.) Dainty and good.

Tomato Catsup—Four quarts of ripe tomatoes, four onions, half teaspoon of grated onion, four table-spoonsful of salt, sugar, ground spoonful of minced parsley, one clove, macis, black pepper, mustard, cayenne, and a dash of capsaicin. Boil for one hour. Strain through a cloth. Add a pint of vinegar.

J. E. Simonin, of Wayne, Neb., had been ailing for a long time and had not found any doctor who understood his disease well enough to cure him at the time he went to the United Doctors, those expert medical specialists who have their St. Joseph Institute on the second floor of 729 Felix street.

"Dear Doctors: "I am more than pleased to write that I am feeling fine. I have not been able to enjoy my work in a long time, as I have the past few weeks. One thing I notice is that I do not get the drowsy spells which I have been subject to for the past year or two. I am about seven times entirely satisfied so much better in every way, considering the short length of time I have been under your treatment, that I am certainly doing better than I had even hoped for and am well pleased.

"I speak a good word for you everywhere, for I know that no one can make a mistake in consulting you, Wayne, Neb., 'J. E. SIMONIN'."

GOATS DIG WAY OUT.

After Sixteen Days in Deep Prospect Shaft Some Emerge Alive.

Silver City, N. M., Sept. 2.—W. C. Sillsby, the Angora goat raiser in the Burri Mountains, reports a remarkable case of endurance by these hardy animals, which, were it not absolutely reliable as to details, would be difficult, indeed, to believe. A small band of goats, twenty-four in number, by some mischance, fell into an abandoned assessment hole. They were missed, and a careful search was made for them by the herder without results. Sixteen days later, on returning to the same part of the country in which the goats had been lost, they were discovered. Nine of the original twenty-four were still alive, and though so weak that two more died shortly after being taken out, Mr. Sillsby believes the other seven will live.

How deep the hole was when the goats fell is not known, but it must have been more than 6 feet, possibly much more. When the goats were found the hole was so shallow that the animals were able to look over the edge of it, but owing to their weakness they were held prisoners as securely as when the hole had been many feet deeper. The explanation of this peculiar phenomenon is that a goat having fallen into a hole, will stand upon its hind legs with its front feet against the wall and walk round and round. If the rock is crumbly the sharp hoofs will loosen piece after piece. How many miles these goats walked in circling around the hole will never be known, but it is safe to assume that they kept pretty steady at it for sixteen days. Many of the twenty-four must have been smothered by others falling upon them, and the endurance shown by the survivors is all the more astonishing.

BUILDING A SILO.

First To Go Up in Immediate Vicinity of Wathena, Kan.

Wathena, Kan., Sept. 2.—Dr. Carter and son, R. B. Carter, are building a silo, which will be the first in this neighborhood, and have started something which will likely be followed rapidly by many others. Forage for stock has never been a consideration in these productive parts until now when it has become a realization that the high price of meat indicates a condition that has come to stay and is worth taking notice of. If the silo principle in canning foodstuff operates well for people, there is no reason why it should not answer as well for stock, and a silo is simply a big jar of preserves for stock instead of for people.

Dr. Carter's silo will be built of hollow brick tile such as have been tested and found preferable on the large Rankin estates over in Missouri, where there are many more and now building on this method after a trial of it. The air space of the hollow tile, it is claimed, is a protection from freezing, while the glaze put upon it makes it impervious to moisture. The work is being done by the men from Missouri who are engaged in building silos as a specialty. There are a few silos in the country and some have obtained a lead with the public in considering the matter of silos, Dr. Carter's hollow tile structure will be an object lesson worth while.—Wathena Republican.

WILL AID IN GRAIN MOVEMENT.

Western Dealers to Co-operate With Railroads in Preventing Congestion.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 2.—"The bumper grain crop of 1912 and how it can be handled" is one of several problems being discussed at a conference of officers of state and national grain associations which began here today. The conference was called at the expressed wish of officers of the state and national associations to act as a federation with railroad officials, principally in devising ways and means for moving the gigantic crops which are reported as available for 1912. At the session officers are present from Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Missouri, Colorado and Indiana.

W. A. Garrett, chairman of the Association of Western Railroads, urged each state and national grain association to assist the railroads in their work of handling bumper crops during the coming fall and winter. Lee Metcalf, of Illinois, president of the Illinois State Grain Dealers' Association, was chairman and George W. Van de Des Moines, secretary of the Western Grain Dealers' Association, secretary of the conference.

THE BOY OR GIRL WHO RIDES

Master of Riding School Says They Should Know Their Equipment.

From Vogue: Mr. William Durland, who has probably trained more successful riders than any other man in America, said, in speaking of his experience with children: "I have always believed that a child should know every detail of the management of a horse and its equipment. A girl or boy should be able to take a bridle to pieces and put it together again, should know how to patch in case of an accident, should know when a bit is properly placed in a horse's mouth, when a saddle is rightly placed on a horse's back, not too high on the withers, nor too far back, should know when the girths are strong and tight enough, and what to do if they break." He believes that a child should know how to groom a horse and how to care for its harness. No superficial ability to sit and master a horse should count. It is thoroughness that is essential.

OBSERVE LABOR DAY.

Big Crowd in Attendance At Labor Picnic At Lake.

Today, Labor day, is being generally observed as a holiday in the United States. Proclamations declaring the first Monday in September a legal holiday were issued by the governors of practically every state in the Union. In St. Joseph business was largely suspended outside of the stock yards district. The city hall, courthouses and main postoffice were all closed. The Board of Trade was also closed, as was the hay market. The live stock markets were open as usual but the packing houses did not do any killing and stock bought on the market today will be carried over till tomorrow.

A labor picnic is in progress at Lake Country and a big crowd is spending the day at the resort. A light shower fell this morning but the sun came out and most of the day was pleasant, breezy speaking, a nice cooling weather making the day almost ideal for picnicking.

Nurse Mary's Patient

By Susanne Glenn

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Frederick Woodard sat as if stunned. "Surely you do not mean it?" he said to Evelyn Baird, appealingly.

"But surely I do, Frederick. We are entirely unvisited to each other." "That is such a threadbare story, Evelyn."

"Yet it is true. I love you; still, I know we should never be happy together after the first. I have seen it tried too many times to deliberately walk with you into disillusionment."

"I must confess I do not understand your theory, Evelyn. If we had not been suited to each other, why should we have learned to care so entirely? Remember this is no unpassioned, love-at-the-instant affair. We have been growing into it all our lives. We enjoy the same amusements, the same studies, the same interests."

"But life, dear boy, does not consist entirely of reading poetry and studying nature at close range. If it did—"

She spread out her pretty hands with an expressive sigh. "You do not understand yet. Listen, Freddie. You know that lovely little white house that your mother kept so exquisitely? Perhaps you do not know that the whole countryside wondered how she managed to do it and educate her children and keep so beautifully sweet and wonderful herself?"

"That is what you were brought up to, and—I should fall you, that is all. No matter how much I might wish to be a good wife to you, I could never do it, not in that way. I do not know how. We were not brought up alike. We are as far apart as—"

"Money can make us," supplanted the young man bitterly. "Not that," she cried sharply. "Do you think I do not suffer? Do you think I fear poverty in itself? I only—"

She paused as if powerless to proceed. "However you express it, Evelyn," he said more kindly, "you cannot deny that it is money—or rather my lack of it—that is separating us. But perhaps, as you say, it is better now than later. I suppose men do not always understand such things. I know I never dreamed of my mother as being unhappy or overburdened."

That evening Frederick Woodard sat in the silent little white house. Everything was as his mother had left it. Perhaps only those who are blessed with such a mother as his can realize what a home means. How many hours he had spent here since the house was tenanted! And now Evelyn had said she could not come!

He did not mean or bewail his fate. He jammed his hands deep into his pockets, and looked straight ahead with hard, unseeing eyes.

Were all the finer things of life subservient to money after all? Must a man buy his wife and their subsequent happiness with the sordid currency of the country? Was his mother a disappointed woman crushed by a relentless poverty?

The early December twilight gath ered in the room where Evelyn Baird was seated. She felt very curious about this room, the abode of a busy self-sacrificing nurse.

Upon her return home from a pill grudge in which she had endeavored to forget Frederick Woodard and their unfortunate affair, she was surprised and delighted to find her old friend Mary Dawson so near her.

Yet their first visit had been broken in upon by a hurry call from the local physician.

"You stay here," the capable nurse had said as she hastily donned her warm wraps. "If it is anything that will detain me, I will call you up. Otherwise, I'll be back in half an hour. You will find things to read if you care for them. Good-bye, dear."

So Evelyn sat in the room so different in its simplicity from her own lovely apartments, and wondered what it must seem like to be always ready for a call.

Presently the telephone rang. "Hello, Evelyn," called Mary's cheer ful voice. "I'm sorry, but you may as well go home. I will not be back to night. Come in and see me tomorrow at two, that is my hour off, and I will be at my room. Good night."

Evelyn went next day, eager more unaccountably, to hear about the case. "Why, it is an old neighbor of yours," declared Mary Dawson. "You surely remember Fred Woodard? He is just back from some place in the southwest where he has been building a bridge. Was taken at the hotel yesterday with an ugly fever. It is a pity, for it is such a dreadful place for him."

"Is he dangerously ill?" Evelyn's voice sounded strange and uninterested.

"He is delirious, and the doctor says there isn't much to build on—seems to have gone to pieces generally. He talks continually about a key. He begs me to get it and unlock the door so he can get in. He seems to have an impression that he is locked out of his own house."

"He is!" sobbed Evelyn, rushing suddenly from the room, leaving her astonished friend alone.

A few minutes later a white faced girl was talking earnestly with the kind old doctor.

"Why, the very thing," he said, patting her shoulder soothingly. "It will be hard to move him, but that will be less harmful than for him to stay where he is. Get the key this afternoon and we'll get him over there in the morning."

It seemed like sacrilege when the girl tremblingly began her search among his possessions for the key. In a small box it lay, with a picture of his mother and—one of herself! She kissed them all in infinite relief. Then she hastened to the little white house. With her own hands, unaccustomed to labor as they were, she swept and dusted, aired the rooms and built fires.

"It is of no use to interfere," she told her astonished mother, "if he lives and wants me, I am going to marry him!"

But Frederick Woodard did not know when he was placed in his own bed in the pleasant, sunny chamber. He continued to beg to be taken home. It was not until Evelyn with her own hands placed the key in his weak fingers that he sank to a refreshing slumber.

One day the sick man's eyes opened with a rational light. He gazed about him in slow bewilderment. The sunlight glistened through the windows. Evelyn sat near him in her white gown over which the fire cast rosy shadows.

"Is it a dream?" he whispered at last. "It is no dream; you are really at home, Freddie," she smiled quietly. "But how did I get here?"

"You were ill at the hotel. We knew you would be more comfortable here at home, so I opened the house and Dr. Way and Nurse Mary brought you here."

"And you?" "Oh, I have come over through the day to look after the house, and to sit with you during the nurse's hour at home."

"Whom do you have to help, Evelyn?" "Why, no one, dear boy. I do it myself. Will you believe that I actually enjoy it? It is the first time I ever did anything useful for anyone, Frederick. I—did not understand how it could be a joy instead of a hardship!"

At the look in the sick man's face the girl slipped to her knees beside his bed. "I want to come—to stay, Frederick, if you still want me."

"Dear," he said, "wait. You are pitying me now because I am ill."

"It isn't that. I am not afraid anymore; experience has made me wiser. I understand now what made your mother so lovely. I'll never be like her, dear, for I did not begin right. But I'll try so hard to be a good wife. Will you take me back, Frederick?"

Woodard put his arms about her with quiet remarkable strength.

VALUABLE SENSE OF HUMOR. Its Possession, Shown by Shrewd Expedient, Possibly What Made Preacher Great.

A sense of humor in a preacher of the Crusades seems incongruous if not incredible, but Foulques de Neuilly of whom Prof. John C. Hildt writes in the South Atlantic Quarterly, evidently possessed it. One day, when his garments were being torn from him by the crowd, who thought every bit of his clothing holy, he called out: "Take care, do not tear to pieces my clothes; they are not blessed. I am going to bless the cassock of that man yonder." Thereupon he made the sign of the cross, and immediately the people fell upon the other man and tore his garment into a thousand pieces, each of which was treasured as a relic. Nor did Foulques lack shrewdness. The power of working miracles was attributed to him, and multitudes flocked to him from great distances to be healed. His method of curing them was simple; merely a touch of the hands, or the bestowal of his blessing with the sign of the cross or a drink of holy water from his own hand. Of course, many were not healed. To these he said that the time for their cure had not come, or that they had not sufficiently expiated their sins, or that it was not good for their souls for them to be healed straightway, lest they speedily fall again into their worldly ways. Apparently these explanations were satisfactory.

Cautious. A lady making a social call was told by the maid that her mistress was not at home.

The caller smiled sarcastically and said: "Ah, indeed! Will you please tell your mistress that when I saw her peeping from the front window as I came up the drive I felt very much afraid she was."—Harper's Magazine.

RAPE AND PEA FORAGE. The annual forage crop for swine which has given best results at the Missouri experiment station is rape in which has been sown a few oats. Rape may be sown as early in the spring as the ground can be worked or about the same time that oats would be sown. It is a rapid growing, succulent crop and hence it is well adapted for swine pasture. The Dwarf Essex is the variety sown for this purpose. Good results have been obtained by sowing five or six pounds ahead of the drill and then drilling in ooe-half. If the house is damp scatter some dry ashes and air-slacked lime about. They are good absorbents. Rye may be cut for hay and used for all classes of live stock.
