No Fear for a Big Cotton Crop

An authoritative statement on 1937 cotton prospects is the following by C .A. Cobb Director Southern Division and these paragraphs: of the AAA, from which Summarizing the cotton situation, the consensus of opinion is that there will be an increase of 10 to 12 per cent in planted cotton arcreage in this year over last. This would mean between 33.2 million and 33.8 million harvested acres as compared with 30.0 million harvested acres last year. Should the average yield be no more than that during the past four years (192 pounds per acre) the production would be between 13.3 and 13.5 million bales, say 13.4 million bales. With favorable conditions it would of course be greater.

"Outlook for the world carry-over of American cotton on August 1, 1937, is approximately 6 millian bales, which is excessive; added to indicated production it would give a world supply of American cotton for 1937-38 of around 19.4 million bales, or the same as last season

"A larger American crop than 12.5 million bales, a larger foreign crop than 16.5 million bales, or a lower rate of industrial activity than the December, 1936, rate, or achievement. a combination of these would undoubtedly result in a very unsatisfactory price this fail. A domestic crop of 14.0 million bales, even with an average industrial activity as high as it has been, could result in prices of 10 cents or less.

"Small farmers, those who produce 10 or 15 bales a year (and that is above average), feel that the $600 or $900 of gross income they obtain from their crop, with cotton at gross income they obtain from their crop, with cotton at 12 cents a pound, is becoming increasingly inadequate as liv

Some Costly Mistakes

The following true story of a mistake and its consequences is taken from a communication by a farmer in Alabama, but would be just as applicated to an Eastland county farmer and the theory applies to other acts of mis-management as well as failure to screen the windows or doors:

Last spring I bought two rolls of wire to screen my house with but lacked enough for one do r and two windows. Well, I was busy on the farm and just kept putting off buying the rest. My wife and I kept separate accounts of what we bought and sold and in December when we checked up I found she had spent $8 for fly fluid, when $1 more spent for screen wire would have screened the entire house. Another mistake, which of course the first mistake helped cause, was last September when the county health officer notified me that my little boy's health was declining and l kent puttnig it off. In October I paid out $50 in doctor's bills, suffered untold heartaches, and almost lost the little fellow's life—all caused by putting off things I should have been seeing after.—R. L. P., Alabama."

Seven Changes to Make Farming Pay

Seven things Southern farmers must add in order to make Southern agriculture prosperous are thus summarized Less Woods fresh from Eastland A. by a weekly editor:
