The Obsolete Wish

When most of today's adults were children their perennial wish was to be "grown-up" and to be able to do the marvelous things grown-ups did. Have the little folks grown

Some one recently asked about 50 youngsters if they would like to be grown up, and why. One lone child answered yes, because "then I could be my own boss." The other 49 were strong for the status quo. Their reasons were strong and firm. They ran something like this:

You have to worry about your kids." "You have to go to war." "You have to bother about whether there's enough for the family to eat." "You can't run around when you want to." "You have to be solemn." "You get deaf and have to use glasses.

Perhaps this is a symptom of that precocious, calcu- A 14-foot statue of Sun Yat-Sen, ago. lating "wiseness" ascribed to the younger generation by their despairing elders. They are said to see life with cold, disillusioned eyes, and so prefer their irresponsible childhood to be erected soon on the spot where the harassed existence of their parents.

When this tobacco grows right

In this day and age it is far easier to do housework than in the days of our grandfather or even our mother, and there is no excuse for the girl who goes to a home of her own without knowing how to keep a house.

And besides the busy girl has no time to go gadding, and therefore she is not on the street. She is not a boy chaser. She has no time to spend in the post office loafing, neither is she a depot platform prancer. The busy girl s a wholesome, happy, self-respecting soul who has the right sort of a mother.

It's well enough to teach the girls to work, but why howl so much about the women and girls falling short. If men would be real gentlemen, and teach their sons to work more and act the gentleman more, then the women and girls would not have such a hard time getting through this world.

"Words in excess of 25 will be charged for in groups of 5 instead of 10, as at present. The rates start at an unprecedentedly low level and decrease progressively as the length of the message increases, reulting in added word rates as low as one cent for five words for mesages sent a short distance and for night letters sent over the greatest distances from Cisco, seven cents for five words sent in excess of 200. This is a new principle in ratemaking and is designed to facilitate the use of the telegraph for all manner of business and social commuinications, no matter what length. Typical reductions in the rates for night letters from Cisco are:
