NIGHTS TO BE SUSPENDED

DALLAS, June 15 (UR)-Interstate Circuit Incorporated. operating 120 Texas theatres, announced today that "bank night" in its houses would be "discontinued indefinitely and and until such time as the legal status is finally determined."

The Palace theatre will discontinue "bank night", according to a statement today, on the receipt of a telegram from R &R headquarters in Dallas today saying that council had suggested suspending of this feature until such time as all litigations and discussions were settled. "Of course," said Mrs. K. N. Greer today, "if we had known last week that the bank night feature would be discontinued, we would have given the pot away, and if the feature should be resumed we will award it in the usual manner. As it is there is nothing we can do about it."

J. E. Spencer, secretary of the chamber of commerce in charge of the merchant bank day feature said that his advices from headquarters was that they would not be effected by the the atre bank night ruling and at any rate they would hold their usual program Wednesday.

Wholehearted Cooperation

Commenting on a recent example of cooperation between the New York Stock Exchange and the Securities and Exchange commission ch the exchange established dealing with margin trading, the new and stringent ruling Wall Street Journal said: "The interesting and important point in the matter is not the terms of the rules but the fact stands the plenary authority of the governing body of the merce into close contact with the industrial east. One of the most notable features of late financial events has been the fine spirit existing between the exchange and with the passing of the years. The modern "streamliner" SEC. The exchange has in many instances voluntarily gone and efficient, courteous service is proof enough of this fact. farther than the SEC requires to eliminate what might be Modern railroad organizations are alive and flexible to changtermed "borderline" cases. On occasions it has taken decisive ing conditions, and as always are seeking that illusory ideal action in regard to matters with which the law does not deal.

The exchange's service to the investor-especially the small investor, without highly organized facilities for guaging the merit of securities—has been of inestimable value. Financial manipulations are now next to impossible. "Wash selling" has been banned. Dealings on dangerously small margins are outlawed. Every concern listing securities on the exchange is required to make public all pertinent facts bearing on its past experience, present condition and future prospects. A concern which misrepresents not only violates the law, but faces suspension of listing on the exchange.

The upshot of all this is that never before was the in- savagery to bring this about, vestor so thoroughly protected-and never before was it possible to buy and sell securities on so scientific a basis.

'If You Want to Do It Right'

Many years ago when the railroad industry was still suffering acute growing pains, a certain railroad president became aware of the inacequate and obsolete equipment! which his company owned, and dec.ded to do something about it. One would naturally think that such a decision would involve the calling in of numerous assistants, a long series of investigations, and the study of voluminous records. But not so with this railroad president. Apparently believing in the old saying that "if you want something done right, do it yourself," he immediately ordered an observation car hooked to the front of a locomotive and journeyed over every mile of his company's property, taking notes on everyaing from tie spikes to rolling stock and buildings. As a result of this survey, so the story goes, "thousands of new oversize cars were bought, doubling the freight capacity; powerful engines were ordered; and the road was straightened, later called the most magnificent railroad property in

This incident is illustrative of the aggressive leadership and farsighted ability that characterized the "behind the scenes" development and growth of the American railroads.
