A $20 Vacation Trip

It isn't necessary to have much money to enjoy a vacation trip. We take the following account of a very interesting trip taken by a group of Kentucky farm folk:

"By truck and camping at night for two weeks, traveling 2,100 miles, sounds as if one would undergo great hardships, doesn't it? But that is not the case. And surely no one ever made such a trip as this. There were 28 of us and the cost of food and the vacation was only $20 per person.

"The four long seats lengthwise the truck were well padded with bedclothes and cushions, and a few times when the weather was cool, we used comforts for laprobes, and blankets around our shoulders, Indian fashion. The luggage was stored snugly under the seats, and food and cooking utensils were carried in a large box on top of the cab. There was plenty of room to move about and change groups, which added to the interest and sociability. We were soon acquainted and felt like old friends. We carried a canvas cover for the top of the truck when the sun was too hot, and a large tarpaulin to cover the entire truck in case of rain. The truck rode as smoothly as a touring car, and our being able to move about kept us from getting tired. We always spent the night near a tourist camp, so those who preferred could take cabins, while for those who liked sleeping in the fresh air under the stars, large tarpaulins were spread on the ground, then comforts and blankets, and we rolled up in these and slept soundly. In the morning we gathered around the camp fire and cooked our breakfast.

"I can't tell you all the wonderful places we visited. We saw Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson. The 32-mile 'sky-line drive' through the Shenandoah National Park was wonderful beyond description. In Washington we visited the state buildings and other points of interest, and the next day enjoyed Mt. Vernon, Fredericksburg, which has been restored by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., we went through the old Governor's Palace. In the exquisite dining room with its 200-year-old table, spread with old linen cloth and hand-woven napkins a yard square, one could imagine Virginia's colonial governor sitting down to dinner with 55 guests! Charleston, S. C., was the most charming city we visited, and our return drive through the Great Smoky Mountains was perhaps the most enjoyable of all. We also saw Norris Dam, Cumberland Gap, Middleboro, and Cumberland Falls."

BUILDING HINTS

Increased building activity makes specially important the following rules for termite and rot prevention by W. C. Nettles, extension entomologist: Provide adequate ventilation; remove wooden 'stiff knees' and worms around pillars or chimneys; leave no stumps, chips or lumber beneath buildings; place wooden timbers out of contact with soil. C. V. Phagan adds: "Cheap paint is a poor investment; time spent in applying it is more valuable than the paint itself. It is also advisable to use ready-mixed paints, rather than try to mix the ingredients on the farm."

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—We may be overlooking wrangling over the headed toward a great and historic Senate filibuster and then again we may not.

The question has arisen in the verbal maneuvers on the court fight. The no-compromise opponents are bragging about what good filibusters they are, and promising that they will have at least 20 human wind machines working in five-man shifts to talk to death any new version of the Roosevelt court proposal that may be presented.

But there would be no point in a filibuster unless the filibusters knew they would be licked if the issue came to a vote.

Famous filibusters of the past have depended for success on the fact that Congress was scheduled to quit on a certain day and legislation could be blocked by the process of taking up the intervening time by abuse of the Senate's unlimited debate privilege.

But the Twenty-first constitutional amendment has always been considered a blow at the filibuster technique because there is no longer any short session or definite adjournment date.

Furthermore, administration supporters are inclined to believe that there aren't enough men on the opposition side who will want to make themselves conspicuous last ditch fighters against a compromise.

The question whether to bring hundreds of Basque children to this country for refuge while their fathers and mothers are being massacred at home has been widely argued here as the State Department sought to avoid saying yes or no.

OUT OUR WAY

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By GORDON K. SHEARER
United Press Staff Correspondent

AUSTIN, July 6 (UP)—Gov. James V. Allred's chances in a race for a third term are viewed differently by various political writers. Most of them name Atty. Gen. William McCraw as the man Allred will have to beat next year if he is to have the honor of being the state's first three-term chief executive.

Ironically enough, much of the strength both of them will have in the campaign comes from matters McCraw has inherited from Allred.

McCraw secured re-instatement of the $17,850,000 anti-trust penalty suit against oil companies and associations, which had put Allred first in the limelight as a candidate for governor.

Arguments will be heard July 7 in the State Supreme Court in another suit in which McCraw is defending an Allred policy. Validity of the chain store tax advocate by Allred is at stake in the suit. The case will come before the court from the Court of Civil Appeals at Dallas. There are 302 "chains" in Texas with 3,585 units which in 1935 did a retail business of $133,612,000.

Whoever may win next year's election, the next state Democratic platform will be scrutinized closely. It will not be accepted in the fashion that has prevailed when most of them were adopted.

The state platform is adopted after the deciding election and not before the election like a national party platform. This is true because the overwhelming Democratic majority in Texas makes the winning of the Democratic nomination equivalent to election.

Usually the platform is scrambled together and adopted with a whoop after the primary election returns have been canvassed. The platform usually is drawn to suit the personal views of the candidate.

"He's won the election, let him write the platform," is the attitude. "The convention is the governor's show," a current news account of the last state convention at Fort Worth said.

Governor Allred is directly responsible for an awakened interest in platforms. He decided that a platform ought to be carried out—not just listened to. At least, he insisted that the legislature vote on its proposals.

So in September, 1938, when the Democratic candidate for governor is acclaimed and put before the people for the formality of a general election, the platform will have been scanned with care. Places on the platform committee will be that important.

There has been lethargy about platforms cannot be disputed. A reference to newspaper files of Last September show that there were about 200 delegates present in the Fort Worth convention hall when the platform was reported and finally adopted. "In many cases the votes of the whole delegation from populous counties was cast by a single delegate," the Dallas News reported.

It is true there were some fights in the committee over planks and some argued on the convention floor ratification of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution and censorship of the Daily Texan. University of Texas student paper, were the chief sources of discord.

A platform demand for adoption of the child labor amendment was carried by a convention vote of 792 to 260 in the regular session of the state legislature. Sen. Allan Shivers of Fort Arthur led the fight for ratification. Opposing it were some of the senators close to the governor. They later were known as among the administration stalwarts in demanding that the platform demand "immediate" repeal of the parimutuel race betting law be carried out.

Shivers' alleged change of attitude on parimutuels recently resulted in an attack from Gov. Allred.

It is no secret that the original draft of the State Democratic platform for the Fort Worth convention was written by Elbert Hooper. Hooper had been First Assistant Attorney General when Allred was Attorney General. He wrote it to meet the governor's views. Hooper included a renewal of the call for repeal of parimutuel racing although he personally had taken a leading part against repeal at the preceding session of the legislature. Tom B. Love, of Dallas had the section rewritten to call for "immediate" repeal. Love told the committee that without a strong demand, it would be claimed the party was no longer for repeal.

Whatever senators in and out of the Allred fold may think about the platform, Allred himself is sticking to it. Re-reading the convention proceedings recalls that he personally drew a line through the word "reasonable" and substituted "substantial" as a description of the kind of increases needed in natural resource taxes.

The platform called also for more effective franchise taxes, increased inheritance taxes and power for the state tax board to help counties and districts to assess natural resources for taxation. An amendment proposed the same power in setting values for insurance companies. The platform called for utility regulation. Allred said he will submit that to a special session after revenues are adjusted. It called for more adequate care of insane persons. An $817,000 appropriation for a West Texas hospital was one of the few large items Gov. Allred approved.

Spanish Flag Saves Lives of Family

WINNIPEG, Man. (UP)—Thomas Smith, a missionary, tells how a hastily improvised British flag, saved from a wobbly flagpole, safely guarded the lives of his family in Spain during the hectic days preceding and after the capture of Malaga.

Smith lived in Malaga for 17 years and recently was in Winnipeg on a lecture tour. He gave a graphic word picture of the respect for the British flag held by both sides in Spain.

When the insurrections broke out, Smith said, he and his family found themselves in a precarious situation. Midway between two Communist headquarters in the city, their comings and goings were closely scrutinized, particularly as Smith owned a motorcycle, evidence of considerable wealth in the poverty-stricken country.

"First of all," he said, "they ordered us to fly the white flag of peace to denote our neutrality. We complied, but a few days later the order came to hoist the red flag of Communism. We refused and instead hoisted the British flag, which we made from scraps of material we had around the house."

Yesterday, Stinner gives Carolee a beautiful bracelet. Romance begins to grip them both. As they hunt Carolee tells Stuart she will call him from the mesa should she need him!

CHAPTER X
STUART tried all that evening to put two and two together concerning the near tragedies in Superstition, but he couldn't get a satisfactory four. He suspected the Colter men one moment, and dismissed his suspicions the next. His regard for Carolee helped with the dismissals.

Next day, though, he decided on further action. He would drive in for official counsel. He had leased an eight-cylinder car for their stay in Arizona, and he wanted to buy some things in Phoenix anyway. Superstition Lodge was only 40 miles from town.

He drove directly to the Maricopa county courthouse and went in to see the sheriff, old Tex Leatherwood.

"Knowned you was up thar," the old man told Stuart. "We keep a general eye-out on newcomers. Havin' any difficulties?"

"Yes, sir," Stuart answered. "Nothing you could put a finger on."

STUART related details of his father's narrow escape in Superstition, then of his own experience in the mountain. He was about to tell why he suspected the Colters when he suddenly struck him that he couldn't do so. They were, after all, Carolee's family. But she was so separate and different from them in his own mind that he had literally forgotten the relation momentarily. He felt a trifle silly, having to change the course of his narrative to the sheriff.

"Cain't see nothin' to worry about yet, son," old Tex told Stuart. "Superstition is full of queer doin's. Most of it ain't so queer, when you git right down to it. Just a lot of dudes like yourself goes there, and you ain't at home. This is a wild country, come tell you. You're more 't some in a busy town, ain't you?"

Stuart smiled and admitted that it was so. "But the shooting—what about that?" he asked.

"I don't know. Probly some mistake. I do know that hardly a month passes, since I was a young man, that some tale of bein' shot at don't come out of Superstition."

"Son, shots ain't bein' shot at. There's prospectors always takin' one sample from up there. And hunters. And ranchers huntin' steers. Any of 'em likely to shoot at rattlesnakes or painters?"

Stuart considered that a moment, while the old man eyed him. Then the sheriff resumed.

"You take them two fellers at the Water Association here, name of Blaine and Briest. Honest young fellers. Said they was shot at. But it was deer season when they was up there, and men was huntin' in their hills."

"I tell you how it tis—fr years, all my life, there's been tales about Superstition. That's how it got its name. Some people have been killed up there, and each one of 'em makes a corral full of yarns come trailin' along. People are skittish when they go up thar. I feel it m'self. I can hear shots and figger I'm bein' shot at. Son, that mountain's full of ghosts!"

THE sheriff chuckled a little. Stuart smiled and nodded.

"I ought to know," Stuart agreed. "I saw plenty of them when I was craving a drink of water. But dad swore the bullets struck near him. And I can't believe my horse slipped over a cliff."

Old Tex considered that for a moment.

"Didn't you say while ago you found a painter den? Some kittens?"

"Yes, sir. They frightened me plenty."

"Don't blame you, but you likewise wouldn't have come to no harm. These here lions ain't vicious to man. But lemme tell you—they kill many a deer and cow and boss. And a hoss knows it. Son, if yo' hoss got one whiff of a lion near him, he'd go loco. I've seen it. I've killed, I reckon, a hundred lions in my day, and when they tree I have to whup my hoss to get him in shootin' range. Yours likely sported and trembled and run hisself right over that cliff without knowin' it."

"And ripped open my canteen

Irish Etching of Farm Youth Pro

PHILADELPHIA (UP)—A year-old Irish farm boy has had a life's ambition of art exhibited in the United States. Dermot McNaney, of County Kerry, had some "soft ground" etchings here. Critics were lavish in their praise. McNaney's depictions of the moldering castles and scenes of the past were the artist's father, beamed the approving comments. It was through the efforts of McNaney, who works in delphia, that his son's work was rushed here from New York in time for the exhibition. The elder McNaney said that his wife and their children back in County Kerry would be happy too, at success.

STAGE BELIEVED NEAR GREAT ERA... American drama... As regards the subsidized theater, heading the controversial Federal Theater project, Dr. Heffner said: "Why shouldn't drama be subsidized? Symphonies, paintings, opera and all other forms of art receive monetary support. It should be remembered, however, that subsidized drama can only justify its existence when it is in direct contact with its audience. My own feeling is that the theater can and should be able to pay its own way and by paying its own way it best meets the requirements of the audience."

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Cal July 3 (UP)—The American stage has staged a comeback and is headed for a Golden Age, according to Dr. Hubert Heffner, member of the Northwestern University's School of Speech and Drama. Dr. Heffner is conducting the summer course in dramatics at Stanford University, where an elaborate production of "Twelfth Night" in modern tempo will be the outstanding feature of the season. "America's commercial theater leads the world today," Dr. Heffner declared. "It has already recovered from the blight of the economic depression, and now the legitimate stage is on a threshold of a Golden Age."

OIL ACTIVITY IN EASTLAND COUNTY AREA

EASTLAND July 6.—Of paramount interest this week in Eastland county was the spudding of a well 450 feet west from the No. 1 A L. C. Downtown, one and a half miles southeast of Eastland, which was estimated by observers as producing 30 barrels daily. No. 1 A Downtown, section 2, E T. R. survey, block 6, 1,900 feet from the east line, received production from the sand at 1,465 to 1,494 feet. It is to be put on pump. The oil discovery, being drilled by J. L. Reeves and Barnett Petroleum corporation, which is also drilling No. 2 A Downtown, is the most important in Eastland county for several months. At last report Dr. R. C. Ferguson, No. 1 Cardie Fox, league 2, McLennan county school land, block 28, seven miles north of Ranger, was shut down at 1,125 feet. Dr. Ferguson recently acquired 15-32 interest in the well and assumed control of the adjoining obligation which is expected to be to 1,200 feet. One of the newer tests, Hickok Producing & Development company No. 2 Grover S. Cleveland, section 477, S. P. R. company survey, eight miles northwest of Cisco, was drilling at 730 feet in search of gas production found during 1935 from the No. 1 Cleveland. The deep test, being drilled to a proposed depth of 5,300 feet by Gallagher-Lawson et al, one half mile south of Desdemona, Eastland county, but over 100 feet in Comanche county, was drilling at 2,405 feet. In the same area as the Desdemona test was the Hickory et al No. 1 W. M. Martin, two miles southeast of Desdemona, but in Frath county, which was drilling at 1,290 feet. In a deepening project, States Oil Corporation was busy on its No. 5 J. W. Henderson, north of Eastland, NE1-4 section 8, block 4, H & T. C. survey. The well, 825 feet from the west line of NF 1-4 section 8, was running six-inch casing from the north line and 330 feet at 2,245 feet. A distance of 3,603

Spotted Fever Reported in Texas

AUSTIN July 6.—Appearance of the dread Rocky Mountain fever in Texas was evident this week when two cases of the disease reported in Southeast Texas were officially diagnosed as such by Dr. R. R. Spencer, spotted fever expert of the United States Public Health service. Dr. Spencer, vacationing in San Antonio, was pressed into service by State Health Officer Dr. Geo. W. Cox, to diagnose the two cases, one of which proved fatal. Dr. Spencer's diagnosis is the first official recognition of the presence in Texas of Spotted fever, a disease transmittable to men by the bite of TORONTO, Ont. (UP)—A man's courage cannot be measured by his size, Dr. Craig Kightingler, president of the Eastern College of Chiropractic, New York, told the Associated Chiropractors at a meeting here. Dr. Kightingler said that he has treated many circus people and has discovered that while a dwarf will lie on a table for examination, without fear, he has never been able to get a giant or a "strong man" to take a treatment. THEY GO DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS

—Photograph, Canadian National Railway

FROM hundreds of little fishing villages along the east and west coasts of Canada, fishermen daily go down to the sea in ships. These fishermen are as picturesque as the villages they live in. Both have remained utterly unspoiled by the advance of a rather hectic civilization and they are just beginning to be discovered by tourists, especially by those who visit Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and the Gaspé Peninsula. In the upper left hand corner of the layout, a swordfish fisherman is just launching his harpoon in the famous waters off Cape Breton Island; upper right, a Nova Scotia tuna is being hoisted on to a wharf near Chester while the lower group shows two rugged Atlantic fishermen and one of the typical fishing villages that dot the shore of the Gaspé Peninsula.

WORKER PROVES HE'S ALIVE

USE OF SERUM FOR PARALYSIS CASES HALTED

NEW ORLEANS, July 6 (AP) — Because nine persons out of 12,000 vaccinated during the infantile paralysis epidemic in the South in 1935 reported developed the disease, the vaccine developed by Dr. John A. Kolmer of Philadelphia has been withdrawn pending further experiments.

Dr. Kolmer described to the New Orleans Graduate Medical Assembly the dramatic battle waged by medical science against untold suffering that threatened thousands of children and older persons.

He said he underwent a test vaccination with active virus of infantile paralysis. He had no way of knowing if infection with the disease would result.

With this knowledge, in 1932 Dr. Kolmer and a woman assistant subjected themselves to the test.

As a professor of medicine at Temple University, Kolmer sought to establish that the practice of vaccination must not be conducted with dead virus. Eighty per cent of adults carry in their blood an antibody apparently capable of neutralizing this virus, like an antitoxin, he said. But the presence of this antibody can only be revealed through expensive and extensive tests.

Dr. Kolmer vaccinated 18 monkeys with a preparation extracted from the spinal columns of persons who died of infantile paralysis. None of the monkeys became infected and tests showed 17 of the animals retained resistant antibodies in the blood stream.

It was then that Dr. Kolmer made the test on himself. And after his assistant also was successfully vaccinated, he tried the vaccine on his own two children. He also vaccinated 23 other children whose parents asked it be done or consented to it. The injections were subcutaneous. There were no ill-effects in a single case and 84 per cent of the patients developed the desired antibodies.

Came the 1935 epidemic that started in North Carolina. Dozens scores, hundreds of children were stricken and the disease spread rapidly south and west until it reached beyond the Mississippi River.

Between April and October, the vaccine was given to 12,000 individuals in 36 states. Records were obtained in 10,725 cases, 31 per cent of whom were children under four years; 50 per cent were children between 4 and 15 years, and the remainder were past 15.

Nine Persons Affected
"Of the best of my knowledge," said Dr. Kolmer, "none developed the disease. Nine persons, however, who had been given one or two doses instead of the prescribed course of three contracted the paralysis. My critics say they were infected by the virus of the vaccine. My theory is that the disease may have been existent in them, in incubation form, when the vaccine was given.

"But I became worried over the possibility of infection. The administration of the vaccine was stopped pending further experiments along this line."

Again Dr. Kolmer turned to monkeys. He found only 1 per cent infection in subcutaneous injections; none in cases of intracutaneous injections.

"Personally, I am convinced there is no hope for vaccination save by administration of the living active virus in a form safe for human beings," said Dr. Kolmer. "I like to believe that a step has been taken toward solution of the problem and that safety has been increased particularly through intracutaneous injections."

and hits the trail of the canvasser in the summer is to be commended. He should have the support of the public and he should have some way of identifying himself. It is amazing it is not, considering the large number of young fellows who really are working their way through college by means of canvassing every vacation, that the colleges themselves have not adopted some means of enabling such boys to prove their cases!

How simple and effective it would be if the college would provide a card stating that So-and-So is a student there and that during vacation he is canvassing to pay his tuition, the card to bear a photograph of the student, and to be signed by an official of the school. That would clear the air for everybody; the card would serve as a happy introduction at the door; it would protect the cooperative public; it would make easier the work of the genuine college boy canvasser and would make harder the work of the faker.
