

Senate confirms one of Tech's nine regents

By Meghann Lora/The University Daily

Texas Tech's nine-member Board of Regents still has only one official member, but the other eight are one step closer to being confirmed by the state Senate.

University regents are appointed by the governor, but must be approved by the Senate. Eight of Tech's regents have been appointed since the state legislature last met and those eight regents have yet to be approved.

A Senate subcommittee interviewed Rick Francis, Bob Stafford, F. Scott Dueser, Frank Miller, Windy Sitton, Mark Griffin, Larry Anders and Dan Serna Monday in Austin.

Tech President Jon Whitmore said after the interview process, the subcommittee unanimously approved the eight regents. The next step in the confirmation process is a vote by the Senate as a whole. The Senate vote is not yet scheduled but should occur within the next few weeks.

"It would be unusual for them to not be approved before our next regents meeting in mid-May," Whitmore said.

Board Chairman Rick Francis said the interview process went smoothly, and he believes the committee was impressed with the regents' dedication to the university.

"It went very well," he said. "They were very appreciative, and the regents were appreciative of the legislature's efforts also."

The regents were interviewed on various topics regarding higher education, Francis said. Topics included funding, tuition and quality of education. The regents also discussed what Tech's priorities would be for the coming years.

"They asked us questions specifically about how much money we thought it would take to elevate Tech to tier one status," he said.

The regents believe the biggest part of elevating the university's status is strengthening the partnership it has with the state, Francis said. Restoring formula funding to Tech and increasing the amount of money from the state dedicated to research are both key issues that will help Tech in the future.

"Most of what we talked about was our partnership with the legislature," he said. "The key for us is increasing the quality of the product that we provide for our students."

Whitmore said the regents believe the subject of tuition is important to the university and students.

"Keeping tuition down would be an advantage for the university, but would necessitate more funding from the state," he said.

The regents also discussed the increasing numbers

Father could face life in prison for shooting coach

By Lisa Falkenberg/Associated Press

An angry father accused of shooting his son's high school football coach could face life in prison after prosecutors upgraded his assault charge to a first-degree felony, the Van Zandt County criminal district attorney said Tuesday.

Jeffrey Robertson, 45, was charged last week with a second-degree felony of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, punishable by up to 20 years. He is accused of shooting and critically injuring football coach and athletic director Gary Joe Kinne at the school's athletic field house.

But the charge was changed Monday to reflect that a public servant was shot, making it an offense punishable by 5-99 years or life in prison, Van Zandt County Criminal District Attorney Leslie Poynter Dixon said. Prosecutors also added a charge of possession of a firearm on school grounds, punishable by 2-10 years in prison.

Dixon said the warrant for the original charge was secured in the

Senate approves bill to create public law school in North Texas

AUSTIN (AP)—North Texas' first public law school could open before the end of the decade.

Legislation approved by the Senate on Monday would allow the University of North Texas to establish a law school in downtown Dallas and begin accepting students by 2009. The bill, by Sen. Royce West, now goes to the House for consideration.

Under the legislation, UNT would receive $600,000 over the next two years to begin planning for the law school. The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board would conduct a feasibility study on the law school by a June 1, 2006 deadline.

Texas has four public law schools and five private law schools, including two in North Texas.

Students discuss problems with commuter parking lots

SECURING A SPOT: Traffic and Parking town hall meetings continue to make issues, concerns known.

By Travis Cram/The University Daily

Traffic and Parking held a second town meeting for students to voice opinions and concerns Tuesday in the Mesa Room of the Student Union building.

One of the main issues Col. Buddy Knox, director of Traffic and Parking, addressed to the students was the problem with the commuter lots. Knox said this year was the first Traffic and Parking attempted to place a cap on commuter sales. He hopes parking will be easier for students if managing parking lots is made simpler.

Traffic & Parking

"We were a little conservative in the number of permits that we sold this year," he said. "Next year we will actually be managing commuter parking."

Knox said one of the biggest problems with selling the permits on a curve is some students would get to the commuter parking lot next to Jones SBC Stadium just in time for class and it would be full, so students would not have enough time to drive over to the west commuter lot on the other side of campus.

"Because they wouldn't have enough

Amarillo resident files lawsuit against Lubbock Cemetery

By Brittany Barrientos/The University Daily

Not being able to locate someone when one needs them is common, but not being able to locate a dead relative when one already has held their funeral is not.

Unfortunately, this is an issue the city of Lubbock Cemetery is facing. A lawsuit has been filed against the cemetery by Connie Sanders, an Amarillo resident, who said the grave marker indicating her daughter's burial site has been moved.

Chris Carver, one of Sanders' attorneys, said the lawsuit is claiming Sanders and her family purchased a burial plot in the early 1970s to bury their infant daughter, and now the grave marker has disappeared.

"The daughter was buried in an area of the cemetery called Baby Land," he said. "Connie Sanders moved away and later heard there was a problem at the cemetery, because of a prior lawsuit."

Carver said when Sanders returned to Lubbock to visit the burial site, the marker had been removed. He said the only information the city of Lubbock has been able to provide is a note card-like filing system that acknowledges Sanders' daughter was buried somewhere in the cemetery, though there is no physical proof.

"There was a funeral and a grave marker, but without city records, there is no way to tell where the burial actually was," he said. "At this point when you look at the Baby Land area of the cemetery, you can see four headstones and nothing else is visible."

Carver said his law firm has been contacted by other families whose loved ones were buried in the cemetery, but not yet been contacted by anyone else regarding Baby Land.

Conservatives try to counter national gay-supportive event

NEW YORK (AP) — Irked by the success of the nationwide Day of Silence, which seeks to combat anti-gay bias in schools, conservative activists are launching a counter-event this week called the Day of Truth aimed at mobilizing students who believe homosexuality is sinful.

Participating students are being offered T-shirts with the slogan "The Truth Cannot be Silenced" and cards to pass out to classmates Thursday declaring their unwillingness to condone "detrimental personal and social behavior."

The driving force behind the Day of Truth is the Alliance Defense Fund, a Christian legal group that has opposed same-sex marriage and challenged restrictions on religious expression in public schools. The event is endorsed by several influential conservative organizations, including the Christian ministry Focus on the Family and the Southern Baptist Convention's Ethics and Religious Liberty Commission.

Mike Johnson, an Alliance Defense Fund attorney from Shreveport, La., said organizers were unsure how many students would participate in the Day of Truth, but expressed hope it would grow in coming years as more people learned about it.

Johnson said the event is meant to be "peaceful and respectful," but made clear it is motivated by belief that homosexuality is wrong. "You can call it sinful or destructive — ultimately it's both," he said.

The event is designed as a riposte to the Day of Silence, which began on a small scale in 1996 and is now observed by tens of thousands of students annually at hundreds of schools and colleges across the country.

Most Day of Silence participants go through the school day without speaking.

Since 2001, Day of Silence observances have been coordinated by the Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN), a New York-based organization that also has worked to support gay-straight alliances at high schools across the country.

Kevin Jennings, GLSEN's executive director, said he doubted the Day of Truth would gain a following and stature of any significance.

"The Day of Silence was an event conceived of by students themselves in response to a very real problem of bullying and harassment they saw on their campuses," Jennings said. "The Day of Truth is a publicity stunt cooked up by a conservative organization with a political agenda; it's an effort by adults to manipulate some kids."

Underlying the dueling events is a fundamental disagreement over the rationale for the Day of Silence. GLSEN and its allies say the silent protest is specifically targeting harassment of gay students, while the Alliance Defense Fund and other conservatives say GLSEN's agenda is to broaden national acceptance of homosexuality.

"No one is for bullying and harassment," Johnson said. "But that's cloaking their real message — that homosexuality is good for society."

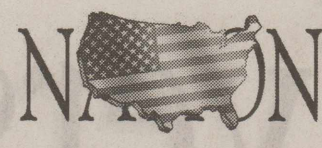

Echoing the stance taken by defense fund lawyers in several court cases, Johnson said teachers and students critical of homosexuality have been pressured to stifle their views while at school. They cite the case of a San Diego-area high school student, Chase Harper, who was disciplined last year for refusing to change out of a T-shirt that read, "Homosexuality is Shameful."

"We wouldn't have come up with the Day of Truth if Christian kids hadn't been silenced in the first place," Johnson said. "The public school is part of the free market of ideas — if the other side is going to advance their point of view, it's only fair for the Christian perspective to present their view, too."

"You can call it sinful or destructive — ultimately it's both."

The Rundown

Bush thanks troops for serving in Iraq

FORTHOOD (AP) — President Bush visited soldiers at the largest U.S. military base Tuesday, marking the two-year anniversary of the end of Saddam Hussein's regime by saying it will be remembered along with the fall of the Berlin Wall as one of history's greatest moments.

Bush thanked the soldiers at Fort Hood who have recently returned from Iraq or are heading there this fall, but said it isn't time to start bringing U.S. forces home.

"Iraqis want to be led by their own countrymen," Bush said. "We'll help them achieve that objective. And then our troops can come home with the honor they deserve."

"In the last two years you have accomplished much, but your work isn't over," he said. Terrorists "will remain under constant pressure from our armed forces."

Base officials said 25,000 soldiers came to hear the commander in chief. As the Marine One helicopter carrying Bush came in for a landing, the pilot circled the enormous crowd crammed shoulder-to-shoulder on a base parade field, waving hand-held American flags.

Nine million expected to ask for tax extension

WASHINGTON (AP) — Like your grade school teacher, the Internal Revenue Service won't believe the dog ate your homework — or your tax return. But harried taxpayers can get another four months beyond Friday's April 15 deadline for getting their returns in.

Almost 9 million people are expected to file for automatic extensions, a step that can be taken with a phone call, a few mouse clicks or a single piece of paper.

The reprieve does not give taxpayers more time to pay any money owed. Anyone who requests an extension must estimate the taxes due and enclose a check or authorize an electronic bank withdrawal. The extension will be voided if the IRS finds the estimate to be unreasonable.

Although the extension form is short, that can be a little deceptive, said Kathy Burlison, director of tax implementation at H&R Block. Calculating an estimate of taxes due forces many taxpayers to fill out most of their return.

"By the time you do the work to figure out the information on the extension, you might as well do your taxes," she said.

German SWAT team rescues schoolchildren

ENNEPETAL, Germany (AP) — German police commandos slipped into a house where a knife-wielding man was holding four schoolgirls hostage Tuesday, surprising the suspect and taking him into custody while rescuing his captives after a five-hour standoff.

The man inflicted a superficial knife wound on the stomach of a 16-year-old hostage, whom he held with three 11-year-olds, before he was captured by a police SWAT team that entered the red brick house at the end of a cul-de-sac shortly after 6 p.m., lead investigator Ulrich Kuhne said.

Police earlier said the suspect, identified as a 50-year-old Iranian asylum-seeker who has been in Germany since the 1990s, was injured as he was overpowered, but Kuhne gave no further details.

The man apparently wanted to be allowed to bring his children from Iran to Germany.

The SWAT team acted with particular caution, because the man was known to have psychological problems and the house in which he held the girls was owned by a hunter who had rifles and handguns on the premises, Kuhne said.

Wal-Mart to fund wildlife habitat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wal-Mart, the world's largest retailer, pledged Tuesday to spend $35 million compensating for wildlife habitat lost nationwide beneath its corporate "footprint."

Acre for acre, Wal-Mart Stores Inc. said it would buy an amount of land equal to all the land its stores, parking lots and distribution centers use over the next 10 years. That would conserve at least 138,000 acres in the United States as "priority" wildlife habitat.

The money will go to the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation, a private nonprofit group created by Congress in 1984 to leverage federal dollars for conservation projects, including 312,000 acres in Maine alone.

"We introduced the concept of the offset program to Wal-Mart last year," said Max Chapman Jr., the foundation's chairman. "They were quick to say yes, and Wal-Mart's leadership is raising the bar in conservation."

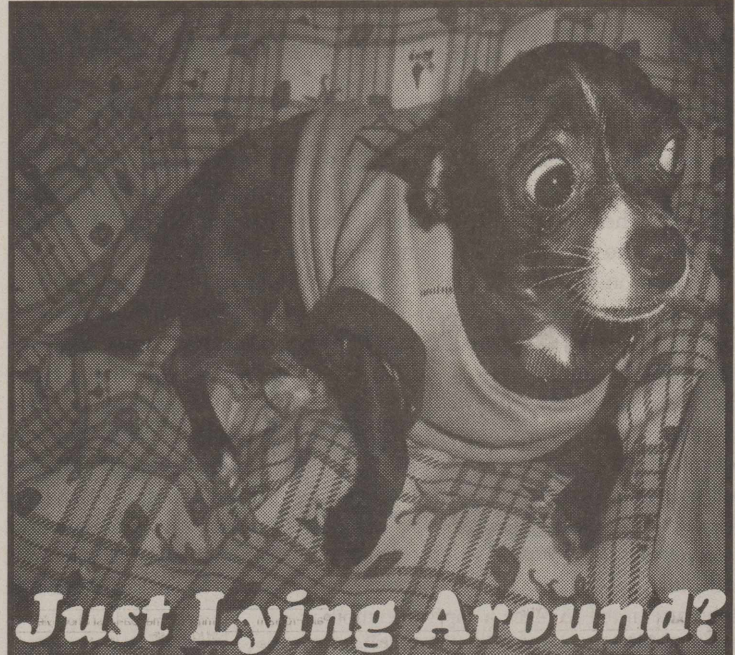

It's the first time any U.S. corporation has pledged such an arrangement, according to Interior Department officials, who will help decide which places to conserve. Interior Secretary Gale Norton said she hopes the deal becomes a model for other companies.

The action also helps Wal-Mart burnish its green credentials, just ahead of Earth Day. The company bought full-page ads in Tuesday's editions of The New York Times and The Washington Post and ads in about 20 other papers touting its new wildlife habitat program.

Wal-Mart has come under scrutiny over its labor practices and how its stores affect communities and competing retailers. Last month it paid a record $11 million to settle federal charges of employing hundreds of illegal immigrants.

With a quarter trillion dollars in annual sales, Wal-Mart employs 1.6 million people at 3,600 U.S. stores and 1,570 stores interna-

Hide-and-seek alarm to help oversleepers

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Before you hit the snooze button a second time on this alarm clock, you'll have to hunt it down. She made a prototype out of foam, a pair of wheels and a circuit board connected to small motors. "It is programmed to tell the motors to move randomly, to generate random speeds and directions so that the clock ends up in a new place every day," she said. Nanda's adviser, V. Michael Bove Jr., said hundreds of people interested in buying or selling the clocks have called and e-mailed. "I've been known to hit the snooze bar for a couple hours, wake up two hours later and be completely shocked," said Nanda, 25, who created Clocky for an industrial design course last year.

Top 10 percent law in question, bills pending

By Kathy Adams/
The Daily Texan

(U-WIRE) AUSTIN — The House Committee on Higher Education began considering methods of capping the top 10 percent law Monday, but left all proposed bills pending.

"Our concern is to keep from getting run over by the [top 10 percent] law," said UT President Larry Faulkner at the committee meeting.

Failure to modify the top 10 percent laws would degrade the educational environment as institutions lose control of enrollment numbers, Faulkner said.

With the number of top 10 percent students having risen to 72 percent of admissions for the 2005-2006 school year, legislators should not assume this problem is far away, he said.

House Bill 1046, authored by state Rep. Dan Branch, R-Dallas, proposes capping the number of students admitted to a public institution of higher education at 50 percent but would require all students with the same ranking be admitted.

The remainder of top 10 percent students not admitted would be pooled with general applicants.

HB 2330, authored by Rep. Geanie Morrison, R-Victoria, proposes capping at 50 percent but gives priority to students who complete the state-recommended curriculum. The rest of the top 10 percent spots would then be filled via a lottery system.

Faulkner proposed admitting 50 percent of top 10 percent students based on their class ranking, giving priority to students who ranked first, second and so on, until all of the slots were filled. He said Texas schools "cannot let the fraction of [those admitted] outside the top 10 percent go nearly to zero, because they will not be able to secure the full range of talents essential to a healthy academic community."

Faulkner said student talents not exhibited by class ranking are important to art, theatre and music program admissions.

Rep. Helen Giddings, D-Dallas, one of the original authors of the top 10 percent law, said she was initially troubled by the idea of capping the law, but after hearing testimony she said she could now understand the controversy.

The committee also considered HB 750, which would repeal the top 10 percent law completely.

Faulkner told the House Subcommittee on Higher Education March 31 that a repeal to the law would be better than no change at all. Giddings opposed a repeal, arguing that 4-out-of-5 Texans support top 10 percent.

Rep. Rob Eissler, R-The Woodlands, proposed HB 37, which would allow university systems to create enrollment plans where top 10 percent applicants could be admitted to any branch within a system. The institutions would make a "reasonable effort" to admit the student to his or her top choice.

Misinformation and the Patriot Act

To take away the Patriot Act's provisions would be to endanger America

Throughout the last several weeks, and essentially its entire life, the Patriot Act has been the target of a relentless attack. Never mind that it has been used to convict more than 150 terrorists, or even that it has been instrumental in the security of this nation for the past three years, opponents of the bill continually use misinformation and overblown rhetoric to sway public opinion.

Turn on any television or read any newspaper, and you no doubt will hear of this bill's evils. Even worse, many believe as you do these things, the FBI is watching, making a list and checking it twice!

But contrary to public opinion, none of the measures within the Patriot Act are unique to its lines, because the intent of the bill was to allow law enforcement to use the same tools against terrorists as it has used against other types of criminals for decades. And as in the past, if you're not doing anything illegal, you have nothing to worry about.

Many of the most hotly contested and misunderstood provisions of the Patriot Act are set to expire this year, yet none of them should.

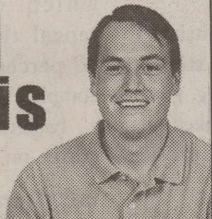

Section 215 of the bill probably is the most debated, and most misconstrued. Often called the "library records" section, it actually says nothing about libraries at all.

The provision simply authorizes the FBI to obtain "tangible" items in the course of an investigation. This can include library records but is primarily aimed at business transactions, driving records, and other documents of the like.

Although liberals have cried ad nauseam "your" library records either will (or already have) been treacherously confiscated, the FBI has not used this provision once since the Patriot Act was signed into law to obtain library records. And even if they do need it in the future, a court order is needed.

Besides, library records, when obtained in the course of other law enforcement investigations, have been useful in dozens of cases and were instrumental

Will Davis

In attacking the Patriot Act, liberals, and even some conservatives, have used fear and outright deceit to turn a useful weapon of law enforcement into the enemy.

And instead of praising the individuals and agencies working to protect America, they have created an aura of mistrust that is wholly unsubstantiated.

in bringing the Unabomber to justice. But I suppose the ACLU and liberal demagogues would love to make public libraries the safest place to plan the next terrorist attack. ("Check out whatever. Chat with Osama on instant messenger. As long as you're in a library, we won't ask any questions!")

The other most notable provision set for expiration is Section 213. This provision allows investigators to carry out "sneak-and-peak" searches of the homes of suspected terrorists — again, something that has been done for decades in other types of cases, mainly mob investigations, and still requires court permission.

The entire purpose of sneak-and-peak searches is to gather information on individuals suspected of terrorist plots without letting them know it was done. Instead of barging in to the suspect's home, taking anything and everything (as is the case in a normal search warrant), agents are permitted to "sneak" into the house and "peak" around, searching for anything suspicious, without taking anything.

Of course, many don't like that delayed notification is inherent in these types of searches. To be sure, the suspect must be notified at a later time, but not right away. If he were, the entire purpose of this search would be nullified, mainly because it's intended to be a secret!

Imagine if the FBI had to sneak into a terrorist's home, look around, and then leave a note on the door informing him of their earlier presence. The suspected terrorist promptly would cease any illegal activity, stop communicating with fellow terrorists, and effectively shut down the investigation being carried out. Ridiculous!

To date, not a single verifiable abuse has stemmed from the Patriot Act, yet its enemies continue to increase.

In attacking the Patriot Act, liberals, and even some conservatives, have used fear and outright deceit to turn a useful weapon of law enforcement into the enemy.

And instead of praising the individuals and agencies working to protect America, they have created an aura of mistrust that is wholly unsubstantiated.

In the war on terror, the FBI and the Justice Department are not the enemy. And the threats against this nation do not reside in a bill that never has been abused.

The real enemy clearly has shown it will use any weakness, and hide in any crevice available. And if the opponents of this bill are successful at creating these weaknesses, they will have become the enemy as well.

VIEW FROM ANOTHER UNIVERSITY

Prince Charles could learn much from pope

By Amanda Hooper/The BG News

(U-WIRE) BOWLING GREEN, Ohio — The pageantry and pomp of the pope's funeral trumped the usually favored ceremonious tradition of choice — the happenings of England's royal family.

Prince Charles' marriage to Camilla Parker Bowles consecrating years of hidden love, separation and infidelity finally happened Saturday afternoon after being pre-empted for Pope John Paul II's funeral Friday.

More than 2 million mourners poured into the streets for the pope's funeral and pay their last respects.

He was a man whose talk matched his walk. He stood steadfast in his faith and refused to compromise traditional principles to become "more relevant."

He prayed four hours a day, but he was not disconnected from the world. He was an intellectual who spoke eight languages and an adventurer who traveled to 129 countries.

He was a rock in his faith and a servant to the world whose death sparked mass reverence for his life and mourning for our collective loss.

Across Europe, Prince Charles and his long-time love Camilla sealed the knot. All it cost them was two marriages, four children in broken homes, public humiliation and private pain. They sacrificed heart and dignity in a selfish affair.

Charles and Camilla finally are united in marriage and the question remains, does "true love" justify any and all behavior?

Why does selfish and destructive behavior occur in the name of love?

Marriage is supposed to be the crowning picture of love, but this marriage is a modern distortion of egocentric grasps for fulfillment.

The pope's steadfast and selfless commitment to people and his firm dedication to principle founded on faith is a more complete portrait of love.

Despite embracing "modernism" in issues of divorce, remarriage and infidelity, the British find their prince to be increasingly irrelevant.

Maybe he is a "nice guy" who made mistakes, but he does not inspire the populace.

They don't care anymore. The vapid shallow appearance of this royal prince's life doesn't encourage his people.

Prince Charles was born into the spotlight, but he has managed to squander his position as a leader.

More Britons watched the Grand National Bandstand (a horse race) than the televised coverage of the royal wedding. It is a far cry from the miles of cheering crowds in 1981 when Prince Charles married Diana.

Prince Charles' illicit affair with Camilla during his marriage to Diana and the cold treatment she received from the royal family stained his image.

Royalty in Britain is like a more incredible form of American celebrity.

Prince Charles is a celebrity and a leader who has the ability to set an example and high standards for his country or to contribute to the moral decline.

Morally weak leaders can uplift or dishearten their people. Mass attendance is down for American Catholics after child molestation charges rocked the public image of the church. The leaders wasted their position and power.

However, around the world, particularly in South America and Africa, Catholicism flourished as they looked to Pope John Paul II as the leader of the faith.

Why was the pope so popular, especially with young people, who typically rebel against tradition? He modeled consistency while others modeled contradictions.

In this world, people are not looking for moral relativism — they are looking for a moral compass. They are looking for something in which to believe and leaders who inspire them.

It's a lonely road without a guide or a map. The pope was that light to billions across the world, not just to Catholics, but as a representation to all faiths.

They are looking for something in which to believe and leaders who inspire them.

It's a lonely road without a guide or a map. The pope was that light to billions across the world, not just to Catholics, but as a representation to all faiths.

The media loved the pope when he championed human rights, social justice and opposed war.

However, when he stood firm against homosexuality, abortion and the ordainment of women he was declared out of touch and resistant to progression.

The media also pursued any scrap of gossip or information on Prince Charles with unrelenting and sometimes ruthless obsession.

In the end, the people were able to distinguish for themselves the difference between a man who handled power with humility and reverence and the self-absorbed prince.

Obviously Britain's royal family and the Catholic Church have to make certain adjustments through time.

The people will look to their leaders and while Catholicism's influence flourished under a great man, the monarchy's influence continues to diminish under a weak one.

Jeff Hartsell, an assistant city attorney representing the city of Lubbock Cemetery, said the lawsuit filed by Sanders has not been answered at this point, but he and the other attorneys will be filing an answer within the 20-day time limit.

"We haven't filed an answer yet," he said. "It is way too early to tell if the suit will go to trial."

Hartsell said if the case were to go to trial, the lawsuit requests a jury trial, as opposed to a sole judge.

He said the previous lawsuit had six plaintiffs and was filed last summer.

"The lawsuit filed in the summer is still ongoing," he said. "We are going to vigorously defend this lawsuit, as well."

Carver said Sanders tried to work with the City of Lubbock for several months, and after receiving no information, her last available option was filing a lawsuit.

"She was never contacted about the change," he said. "She came back and went to the cemetery and had no idea what happened."

Quincy White, the assistant city manager of Lubbock, said he has been overseeing the cemetery for approximately six months and said the problem of losing gravesites has not been common since he began working.

"It hasn't been too common since I took over," he said. "Most families are very appreciative of our services."

White said the cemetery sells plots and collaborates with local funeral homes to identify plot spaces and make arrangements to open and close the gravesites at the time of funerals.

White said the cemetery holds more than 400 funerals a year, but declined to comment on the lawsuit.

Carver said Sanders is filing for monetary compensation because no other relief can be given by the city at this point. The Sanders family can only ask to try to seek damages for the suffering they have experienced.

"Ms. Sanders did not immediately think to file a suit against the city. She has been working with the city for months now to try to find an amiable solution," he said. "She has been left with no other choice. It has been a last option for her."

time to get to the other lot they would just park in the mud and dirt alongside Brownfield Highway and they have already bought a commuter permit and that just seemed kind of silly," he said.

The north C-1 lot next to the stadium will be one of the main lots Traffic and Parking will manage, according to the department.

Knox said just enough permits for the C-1 lot would be issued in order to guarantee that the student always would have a spot.

"You'll have a parking permit and not a hunting license," he said.

Knox said he is unsure how much a permit will cost next year until the Board of Regents meet in May to put prices on next year's permits.

The department is considering a presale for next year without a price tag on the permits so students who sign up will be guaranteed a spot.

"We understand that if we don't have a presale then every student is going to end up standing in line in our office and we are going to go back to the bad old days before online sales," Knox said.

Max Hinojosa, vice president of operations, said the department is going to try to become better about the management of parking lots and will keep enough space for students.

"We haven't been able to manage the lots like we have in the past," he said. "Our goal is to take away from the core of the campus and concentrate putting it on the outside of campus."

The department also is in the process of putting up a new parking garage in the southeast quadrant of campus that would provide about 1,000 to 1,200 spaces.

Knox said Traffic and Parking also is scheduled to have approximately 1,500 more spaces once road construction is finished and will be freeing up about 300 spaces throughout the summer for next fall.

Thomas Scannell, a junior public relations major, said campus parking is a problem that might be caused by the size of Tech's student population.

"There has been a rapid growth in the student population over the couple of years and it seems like parking just hasn't been able to keep up with it," he said.

Scannell also said even though buses run back and forth from the parking lots, parking still could be a problem because the buses are slow and crowded.

Another issue is making sure the campus is pedestrian friendly.

Hinojosa said grounds maintenance is doing what is necessary to keep the chaos down on campus.

"I think you are going to see the use of bicycles go up much more," he said.

Jordan Janik, a pre-medicine student from Arlington, said he does not mind missing out on parking problems by riding his bike.

"It's a great way to save money on gas," he said. "It's just too much of a hassle to try and find a parking spot and get to class. Why not ride a bike and get some exercise?"

Traffic and Parking will have two more meetings at 11 a.m. today for faculty and staff and at 4 p.m. Thursday for students. Both meetings will take place in the Escondido Theatre of the Student Union building and everyone is welcome to attend.

of students entering Tech and the potential problems associated with that high level of growth, Whitmore said.

"When we have more students, we would need to have more resources so the quality of our education does not go down," he said. Griffin, Anders and Serna were appointed by the governor in March and have not yet participated in an on-campus board meeting.

Whitmore said the new regents still are in the process of becoming familiar with the business of the university.

"Our next step will be to spend some time briefing them on the university," he said.

middle of a manhunt and was "simply a safety measure" to get Robertson behind bars. But after reviewing the evidence, she pursued the stronger charge. She expects a grand jury to meet next week to consider other charges.

"A prosecutor will always seek the highest charge which is supported by the evidence," Dixon said.

Robertson remained in the Van Zandt County jail Tuesday on $1 million bail, plus $100,000 bail for the weapons possession charge. If he posts bond, Dixon said he would be required to wear a leg monitor.

A message left for Robertson's Dallas attorney, William Reece, was not immediately returned to The Associated Press Tuesday.

Dixon said she didn't charge Robertson with attempted murder because it's a second-degree felony and carries the same lighter sentence as the original charge.

Robertson, whose son played freshman football, had several confrontations with students and coaches. He had been banned from school property at the time Kinne was shot in the chest Thursday. Robertson fled the scene and was found, wrists partially slashed, in a wooded area outside this town of 3,500 about 60 miles east of Dallas.

D.C. FOWLER, The last surviving grandson of Daniel "80 John" Wallace, shares his memories of the ranch and of his grandfather with the Upward Bound participants at his ranch Friday afternoon.

Afternoon shadows cast across the lawn at Fort Clark Springs, where high school junior Ester Rios stood shading her eyes on the porch of an old Army barrack.

Ester, a 16-year-old at Estacado High School and a participant in Upward Bound, was ready to board the bus back to Texas Tech after a weekend traveling in academia.

"I learned there's more to buildings than the way they look," Rios said. "Behind every building there's a story."

As the participants listened to a lecture Friday night, a guest speaker informed them of the Wild West heritage in West Texas.

This is not a typical high school or college history class.

According to the national Department of Education Web site, www.ed.gov, Upward Bound is a grant-funded program that provides an academic environment for potential first-generation college students from low-income families.

At 8 a.m., three hours after departing the Tech campus, the Upward Bound bus arrives at the Colorado City Middle School in Colorado City.

Mark Merrell, principal of the school, meets the bus at the main entrance. Many participants still are in their pajamas or have just woken up since leaving Lubbock at 5 a.m.

The participants are in Laramie, outside of Colorado City, to learn about the home of the late Daniel Webster "80 John" Wallace, a West Texas cattle rancher who was born into slavery in 1860 and died in 1939. Wallace was known as "80" John because 80 was his brand.

"Coming from Texas, especially in a time when there was a lot of discrimination, it was incredible he was as successful as he was," Merrell said. "His story is just tremendous."

Merrell, along with a few middle school students, gave the participants a short historical presentation on Wallace.

"Even though he was financially successful, I think the most important thing for him was his family," Merrell said.

Donnica Fowler, a 16-year-old resident of Loraine, is a descendant of Wallace. She said she started preserving her family's history when she was in history class, and her teacher had never heard of Wallace.

"It's my heritage," Donnica said. "I really want people to know about it. To have people all the way from Lubbock — I just thought it was Mitchell County and everything. That's really awesome."

Donnica told the participants why history is important to her.

"He was 70 years old, and he was still riding broncos and stuff. That's amazing," Donnica said. "I hope when I'm 70 or 80 I can still do things I love."

Sonya Lara, a 16-year-old at South Plains Academy, talked with her program friend, Tiffany Gardener, a 15-year-old at Estacado High School.

"He had a lot of land coming out of slavery and everything," Sonya said. "I think this (trip) is going to be cool."

The participants loaded up the bus for Laramie. It was cold and overcast in the rural town; there was a sweet smell of grass and manure in the air. Not much had changed since Wallace's death in 1939.

The participants were bused from the middle school to the old school, for which Wallace funded the construction after the first one-room schoolhouse burned.

Dorothy Fowler, the wife of Wallace's last surviving grandson, led the tour group, which then departed to Wallace's ranch, which still is a working cattle ranch. There, Fowler said she believes ranching is a dying lifestyle.

"Most ranchers these days don't own property; they lease the property," she said. "People have gone into the land. Rich people come out from Dallas and Houston and they lease the land out for all sorts of hunting."

She said she was glad to share the history she knew with the students.

"I guess they get an idea maybe of the early existence of ranch life," Fowler said. "There's something you don't get if you are from the cities or the decent-sized towns. In the early days you worked. You raised your food to eat. I was reared in the country, and I'm still here in the country."

The sun broke through the clouds three miles outside Laramie about 9:30 a.m. The participants frolicked through the ranch pasture, exploring and playing in the knee-high grass. They spiraled back together for a quick architecture lesson before the bus departed for San Angelo.

In San Angelo at 1 p.m., participants got a taste of college food, if not college life, and an opportunity to tour the Angelo State University campus. The bus continued from San Angelo to Del Rio.

The group advisers quickly orchestrated check-in at the hotel, and the participants prepared for a visit to Mexico. The girls brushed their hair and retouched their make-up; the guys put on clean T-shirts. The participants had been on the tour for 12 hours.

Many of the participants had never been to Mexico. Acuña, Del Rio's sister city, is a cross between a dirty and decrepit French Quarter and a quaint, clean Juarez.

Daniel Flores, a 17-year-old at Estacado High School, played trash can basketball as he sat confidently between two girls in the back of the vehicle as it traveled through customs.

Daniel slipped in white-colored contacts once the bus has crossed the border.

"It is perfectly legal," he said. "I'm not doing anything wrong."

The participants walked the streets of Acuña and visited curio shops where they bought souvenirs. Ester purchased a puppet for $5 and learned to say "puppet" in Spanish.

"His name is going to be Pedro," Ester said. "I know how to speak Spanish, and I need to know what he is."

Shopping continued until dusk, when the group got back on the bus to return to the United States. Sonya twisted her bags around as she waited for the group to pass through customs.

"At first, the day was boring," Sonya said. "All we did was sit on the bus. I'm glad we got to get off the bus, and come to Mexico and have new experiences and stuff. It turned out fun."

The day was not yet over. Back at the hotel, dinner and William "Dub" Warrior, waited for the participants.

Warrior, a descendant of John Ward, a Seminole-Negro Indian Scout and a Medal of Honor recipient and John Horse Warrior, Seminole-Negro Indian Scout, worked as a historian to preserve the history and legacy of the scouts in the American West.

"I am just plain old Dub," Warrior said. "I am the most peaceful man in the world."

Warrior lectured the participants on the scouts, the Buffalo Soldiers and war in the west.

"You know, these guys did so much. Without them, this part of Texas would have never been settled," Warrior said. "Be careful what you do, because that will be history someday."

Daniel listened to Warrior speak as he ate pizza. He said history is his favorite school subject.

"We don't learn this stuff in school," he said. "There's a lot more history in Texas than we know about."

Eric Strong, head of the Upward Bound programs at Tech, said 19 of 20 participants in past programs have gone on to complete a college degree. He hopes this program teaches the participants to care about and value history.

"We included ethnic, multicultural history because a lot of it is being lost. One in three cowboys were black or Hispanic. Even 'buckaroo' comes from the mispronounced word 'vaquero' in Spanish," Strong said. "It gives them some self-esteem."

The next day, the participants visited the Seminole Indian Scouts Association Cemetery in Bracketville before heading to Fort Clark Springs in Bracketville.

Fort Clark Springs, established in 1852, was the largest post in Texas until Fort Sam Houston was built. The fort ended operation in 1944.

In Fort Clark Springs, under the direction of architecture professors John White and Gary Smith and architecture graduate students Jeremy Wahlberg and Jamie Smith, the participants worked on a historical architectural survey.

On the east side of the building, Tiffany works on a one-eighth scaled sketch with one hand, and shields her eyes with the other.

In a one-eighth scale, drawings are done so that every eighth of an inch equals 1 square foot. The participants have been learning drafting skills for several weeks leading up to their trip.

"I like doing stuff like this because it makes a difference," she said. "We are losing so much of our history so fast. Doing stuff like this we preserve history."

Strong said he believed the trip was an educational success.

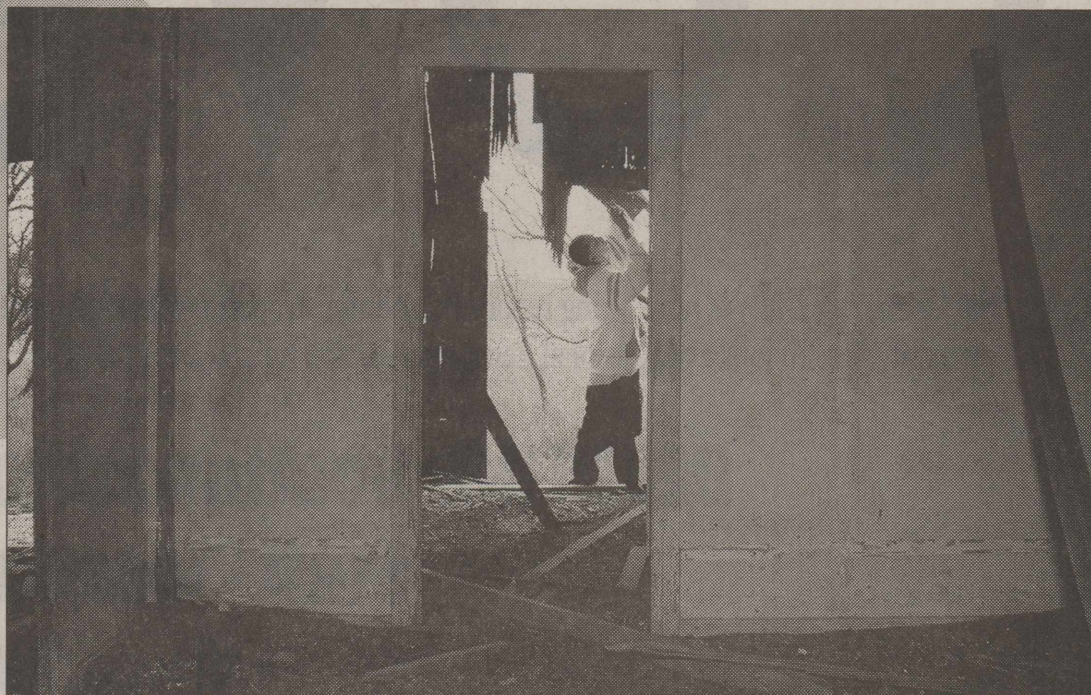

"We try to make everything they do related to a vocational career field they're interested in. Sometimes we do things that are hard, or really creative," he said. "Once you expand your mind, you can never go back. In the long run, I think they'll really appreciate it."

What are Seminole-Negro Indian Scouts?

- Seminoles were a Florida Indian tribe that migrated to Texas.
- When slaves escaped they hid in the same swamps in which the Seminoles lived.
- Seminole-Negro Indians scouted for the U.S. Army during the Indian wars of the late 1800s.

Jaleesa Hardeman, a sophomore at Monterey High School, and Crystal Rogers, a sophomore at Estacado High School, look at a mural of Mexican history inside a municipal building in Acuña, Mexico.

The real coach Ken Carter to speak on campus tonight

Ken Carter, the inspiration for the movie "Coach Carter," will speak at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union building's Allen Theatre. Students with a valid ID can pick up two free tickets to the event at the Student Union ticket booth. General admission tickets can be purchased at any Select-A-Seat location for $10.

When Carter began coaching at Richmond High School in 1997, students were failing classes and the athletic programs needed work, according to his Web site www.coachcarter.com. Within the span of two years, Carter is credited with cleaning up the high school by getting rid of the graffiti and drug dealers that plagued the halls and turning the athletic program around.

Carter's unconventional coaching style made national newscasts in 1999 when he locked his undefeated but academically failing basketball team out of the school gymnasium. When players showed up for practice, they found a locked door and a sign directing them to go study in the library. Until players began doing better in classes, there would be no practices and no games.

Academic success, Carter wrote on his site, is more important in life than athletic ability. So important, Carter forfeited the team's next two games until the players' grades improved. The team finished the season with 19 wins and five losses.

He now is a motivational speaker and head coach of the Los Angeles Rumble SlamBall team.

In addition to coaching, Carter is an author and operates the Prime Time Publishing company and the Coach Ken Carter Foundation, a non-profit organization that provides education, training and mentoring to young minorities.

In Carter's speech tonight, he will speak about the importance of integrity, accountability, teamwork and leadership and offer advice on achieving success.

Experts discuss science, spiritual connection today

The university will host "Science and Spirituality: A Multidisciplinary Colloquium" from 9 a.m. to noon today. Experts from different educational disciplines will deliver a series of lectures on the connection between science and religion. The colloquium will take place in the Formby Room of the Southwest Collections Library.

Scheduled speakers at the conference include Mark Webb, whose discussion, entitled "Science and Religion: Models of Coexistence," will begin at 9 a.m., Safai Hamed who will begin giving her talk, "Seeing the Environment through Islamic Eyes," at around 10:30 a.m., and Sankar Chatterjee who will give a presentation entitled "Science and Religion: Two Sides of the Same Coin?" beginning at 11:20 a.m.

Between 11:40 a.m. and noon the speakers at the conference will allow time for an open panel discussion and a brief question and answer period. Admission is free.

Judge rejects Martha Stewart's bid for new sentence, leniency

NEW YORK (AP) — Martha Stewart's bid for an early release — or at least to be able to leave home more often for work — was dashed by a federal judge who ordered her to serve the full five months of house arrest.

The homemaking maven had told Judge Miriam Goldman Cedarbaum that serving the rest of her sentence would hamper production of her two upcoming television series — a daytime talk show and a new rendition of NBC's "The Apprentice."

In a March Web chat from the estate, Stewart told fans that the electronic monitoring bracelet she must wear during house arrest is "somewhat uncomfortable and irritating."

The judge, in a tersely worded three-page order, rejected Stewart's request Monday, and said she saw "no reason to modify the sentence."

"Home detention is imposed as an alternative to imprisonment. It is designed to be confining," the judge wrote.

Stewart, 63, was convicted last year of lying to the government about a stock sale. She served five months in prison in West Virginia, then in early March began five months of house arrest at her sprawling Westchester County estate, north of New York City.

The judge declined Stewart's bid to be allowed to leave home 80 hours per week for business. Under the original sentence, she is allowed 48 hours per week.

"In my opinion, the sentence I imposed was particularly needed to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for the law and to provide just punishment," Cedarbaum wrote.

Prosecutors declined to comment on the ruling, but Stewart's lawyers were disappointed.

"All she was seeking was the same opportunity for reconsideration as others in her position, and the chance to spend more hours at work," they said in a statement.

Prosecutors had mocked the bid for a shorter sentence, telling the judge in court papers that "minor inconvenience to one's ability to star in a television show is an insufficient ground for resentencing."

Britney Spears announces pregnancy

NEW YORK (AP) — Britney Spears has revealed what might be Hollywood's worst-kept secret: She is pregnant.

In a posting on her Web site, Spears told fans she and husband, Kevin Federline, were expecting their first child together. Her publicist, Sonia Muckle, confirmed the singer's pregnancy Tuesday but refused to provide additional details.

"The time has finally come to share our wonderful news that we are expecting our first child together," the singer said. "There are reports that I was in the hospital this weekend, and Kevin and I just want everyone to know that all is well. Thank you for your thoughts and prayers."

New plan to be discussed when talks resume next week

NEW YORK (AP) — When NHL labor talks resume, a new plan will be up for discussion that attempts to blend elements from both sides' vision of how players will be paid.

Negotiations will probably resume next week, during which a new, hybrid concept — which addresses the relationship between player costs and league revenues — will be brought to the table, a source close to the negotiations told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity Tuesday.

The NHL has maintained that it prefers a link tying player costs to league revenues, while the union has mostly rejected that idea. This new, mixed plan would appear to incorporate elements from both concepts.

Previous compromise discussions have failed to yield signs of progress toward ending the lockout that began seven months ago.

It was thought that talks would resume this week, but as of Tuesday there still was difficulty in scheduling a meeting, the source said. Next week's likely bargaining session would come at a busy time for the NHL, which already has a board of governors meeting planned for Wednesday.

The last bargaining session, held April 4 in Toronto, went better than others since the 2004-05 season was canceled in February. NHL chief legal officer Bill Daly said there was now a good understanding across the table of where the sides are and that he was hopeful there would be continued progress.

Last Thursday, commissioner Gary Bettman and union executive director Bob Goodenow had dinner with some general managers and players in Michigan, where the GMs convened for a meeting. Bettman and Goodenow had a drink together at the hotel bar later that night, and tentatively planned to hold more official talks soon.

Tagliabue: Cowboys likely to host Super Bowl in '11 or '12

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have played in a record eight Super Bowls, winning a record-tying five. About the only thing they have not done is host the big game — and NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue is confident that will change once the team moves into its fancy new home.

"Whether it's 2011 or 2012, I'm quite certain you'll see a Super Bowl in that stadium soon after it opens," Tagliabue said Tuesday during an appearance in Dallas.

The Cowboys used the lure of a Super Bowl as part of their campaign to get voters in Arlington to approve raising taxes to pay for $325 million of the stadium's $650 million price tag. The 75,000-seat, retractable-roof facility is scheduled to open in time for the 2009 season, making the 2010 game the first it would be eligible to host.

With New York tentatively getting that game, the Cowboys already are eagerly eyeing the next available slot.

"I think it has a helluva shot of getting it," Tagliabue said. "Nothing in life is a shoe-in. There will be competition for it."

Cowboys owner Jerry Jones likes his chances.

"We know the type of facility we're going to have is going to be attractive for the Super Bowl — not only initially, but Super Bowls," he said.

Tagliabue spoke at an SMU Lecture Series event, with Jones and Kansas City Chiefs owner Lamar Hunt also sitting at the head table. Answering questions from longtime Cowboys broadcaster Brad Sham, the commissioner spoke about many topics, including why the league voted to pull the plug on team-owned regional TV networks. The Cowboys and Atlanta Falcons were the only ones that had them.

Tech hosts Hardin-Simmons

By Bryan Wendell/
The University Daily

The Texas Tech baseball team will get another opportunity to beat the Cowboys in a 3 p.m. game today at Dan Law Field.

These Cowboys, however, do not hail from Oklahoma State, Tech's opponent last weekend in a 2-1 series victory, these Cowboys are from Hardin-Simmons.

The Hardin-Simmons Cowboys and the Red Raiders scheduled this game to make up for the second of two Tech contests canceled because of inclement weather.

Tech had success against a different Cowboy team during the weekend, coming back from six runs down in the eighth inning to beat OSU, 10-9.

The win ensured Tech (22-11, 5-6 Big 12) would remain among top teams in the Big 12 Conference. Tech sits in sixth among the 10 teams in the conference that have baseball programs.

"I think we're still in the mix," Tech coach Larry Hays said.

"We've still got a chance to finish pretty high right now. Look around the league, and it's close. You just have one good weekend, and you're in pretty good shape."

Senior shortstop Cameron Blair had a successful weekend and remains Tech's most threatening home run hitter. He homered in each game during the weekend to bring his total to 11.

Junior Chris Williams

hit a home run during Tech's comeback victory on Sunday and said his team received a much-needed boost for today's game and the upcoming weekend series at Kansas State.

"As a confidence builder, it's one that we're going to need next weekend going on the road to K-State," he said. "We want to take two or three — maybe sweep them and get right back into the hunt for the conference title."

Tech won its last Wednesday makeup game, defeating Angelo State, 11-6, April 6.

Tech shortstop named Co-Big 12 Player of Week

Blair finished a series victory against the Oklahoma State Cowboys by going 5-for-10 with four walks, a double, two stolen bases, three home runs and five RBIs.

Outfielder Gus Milner of Kansas shares the honor with Blair.

This is Blair's second league honor in his career at Tech, a career that has produced 25 home runs — good for eighth on Tech's all-time list.

Blair transferred to Tech from Grayson County Community College where he tallied 16 home runs during his season there. He already has 11 so far this season.

Raider defense ready to stymie opponents

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

When defensive coordinator Lyle Setencich came to Texas Tech four years ago, he said his system would take time to implement. He had seen it in the past at other schools where he had coached. Wait, he said.

The wait is over, and the defense tallied two interceptions and six sacks from six different players in a scrimmage Saturday.

"I know it was hard for a lot of people to hear coach Setencich say it's gonna take a little bit of time because we have to learn the system," linebacker Brock Stratton said. "With the experience we have now, we do understand it better. At the same time, there is a lot left to learn and get better at."

Two years ago, there was a point in the season the Red Raiders' defense was ranked last of all 117 NCAA Division I-A schools. Setencich continued to add to his system and coach it to a No. 15 pass defense and No. 46 overall. The improvements can be seen in how Tech's defense has not let the nation's No. 1 passing offense run over it during spring practices this year.

"We're throwing a lot of different things at them, a lot of different schemes and blitzes," defensive lineman Brett Bischof-berger said.

Setencich has added some more 3-4 looks from the defense and put more blitz packages into his attack plans for the upcoming season. The new looks are not limited to just formations. Players from every position are contributing in practice and scrimmages, which is something Setencich credits to giving players a chance to prove themselves and earn their spot on the depth chart.

"You try to get a lot of reps in spring football for a lot of kids and try to get yourself two-deep," he said. "The more reps you can get to your players, the more chance you're able for them to give you productive reps in the fall."

Getting his squad to a two-deep situation sooner rather than later would benefit Setencich, who lost starters Adell Duckett, Mike Smith and Josh Rangel from last year's team. Duckett was a force at defensive end and became Tech's career sacks leader last season. Smith was a leader for the team at linebacker, and Rangel made his presence felt in the backfield at safety.

Bischofberger said because the defense had learned so much of the system now, it enables Setencich and his staff to focus more on the installment of the system and improvements that can be made within it rather than building players up to give 100 percent every snap.

"The coaches aren't having to coach effort anymore. They're coaching technique and helping us," he said. "Anytime you bring in a coaching staff you're not sure about the system, you're not sure about those things, and once you get confidence in the system things start to click. Everyone believes in the system now."

The improvement this year also could be linked to new faces on the team getting more recognition for their efforts on the field. Underclassmen have been making plays as well as upperclassmen and showing it will not be easy for the starting lineup. Every player has to make plays this year, which only makes the unit better when everyone has to compete at his best to get playing time. Stratton said it is perfect timing for the younger Raiders to improve and turn some heads, because everyone has to now.

"I think a lot of our younger guys are stepping up. They're really making a name for themselves, and this is the time to do that," he said. "This is not only a time to start learning the system but to get out there throw your body around and make a name for yourself. For all of us, this is an opportunity for us to earn our starting position."

TRACK & FIELD

Tech thrower finds little time outside of preparation for competition

By Anne Gepford/
The University Daily

The typical college lifestyle leaves little time for strenuous workouts and extensive travel.

For someone who competes in shot put, discus, weight throw and hammer, there is no other kind of life.

"Everything pretty much has to do with throwing," Kring said of his life. "It pretty much revolves around throwing and school."

A Lubbock native, Kring lives at home. He said he wanted to go to Tech because of Jason Young, who now is the assistant strength and conditioning coach.

"It was home," Kring said. "I didn't have to travel much."

Kring said he met Young on a recruiting visit to Tech, and liked that he does not have to travel far to see his parents.

Young, a former Tech All-American discus thrower, said he remembered Kring from the visit because of the way he talked about throwing.

"He was far more interested than most of the athletes that come on recruitment visits," Young said.

The interest in sports came from a young age, as Kring grew up playing football starting in fourth grade. In his sophomore year of high school, he said he became more serious about throwing.

Young said the sophomore has improved a great deal since he joined the Tech squad.

"His consistency level increased to where he has a chance to win the Big 12 Conference and be a national contender," he said.

The thrower is better at shot put than the other events in which he competes, Young said. In the 2004 outdoor season, he was all-conference, all-region and a regional qualifier in shot put.

"Naturally, in high school he was a better shot putter than discus thrower," Young said.

Teammate Mark Medley said the throwers at Tech spend a lot of time together, as they are always working out or eating together.

"We're always there to support each other," Medley said. "We push each other in the weight room, on the track or in the ring. We go out to eat all the time."

Medley said Kring helps the team as a leader, because he is a hard worker and creates a good atmosphere for the rest of the team.

"We know that if we get our work done during the week, it will relieve pressure on the weekend," Medley said. "He helps create a good environment during the week so there's not extra pressure on the weekend."

While Young met Kring on a recruitment visit to Tech, Kring passed that legacy to another thrower.

Harrison Benjamin met Kring on a campus visit to Tech, and he said he knew Kring would be someone with whom he could compete and be friends.

"He impacts me because he doesn't throw much farther than me—he gives me competition," Benjamin said. "He's someone to talk to while I'm practicing."

The camaraderie of the throwing team creates a small section of the track and field team with which the athletes can identify.

Coach Cliff Felkins said Kring will play a role in how well the team does at conference this year.

"He's going to step in and do real well," Felkins said. "He's a more than adequate thrower. He's going to impact the team quite a bit."

INTRAMURALS

Tech Strongest Person

How cool is it to be known as Tech's strongest person? Well you have the opportunity to achieve it. TONIGHT - April 13th in the Free Weight Room at the Student Rec Center, the Intramural department will be holding the annual bench press competition. We will have 9 different weight classes for men and an open division for any women interested in lifting. Weigh-in is at 6:30 pm and lifting starts at 7 pm sharp. Each participant will get three lifts. The best lift of the three will be scored. To sign up, JUST SHOW to lift at 6:30pm. Any further questions call 742-2945.

She Beat Pete!

Recently Junior, Megan Murphy, competed against Newschannel 11 Sports Director Pete Christie for the "I Beat Pete" contest. The Anthropology major from Lubbock defeated Pete in a Speed Climbing competition and was featured on the news. Thanks to Pete for "Rockin At The Rec" and way to go!

UNLIMITED HIGHS

Looking for a new way to lift your workouts to the next level? Give the Climbing Wall a try! An annual pass is only $5! The wall can be intimidating, but getting to the top is easier than you think. Here's how:

You could Try a Climb. It requires no pass and it's free!

Take the Fundamentals Class, earn your skills verification and you are ready to climb! Offered Mon-Thurs @ 5:30 This course is a must for any person new to climbing who wants to use the ropes at the wall. We teach the basics of climbing. After this course you will be able to pass your skills verification and climb at the wall.

Tennis Singles Tournament Still Time To Register

Game, Set, Match! Do you have what it takes to be King/Queen of the Court? If you do, then enter the Intramural Tennis Singles Tournament, April 14th and 15th. There are Men's and Women's Leagues in Competitive and Recreational skill levels. Register on the rec sports web site NOW at www.recports.ttu.edu. Deadline for registration is today at 5pm.

4 on 4 Sand Volleyball Tournament

Volleyball is back with a twist. Gather your teams and get ready to dig, bump, set and spike in this 4 on 4 tournament at the rec center sand volleyball courts. Free to enter! This tournament is perfect for groups just looking for a little fun in the sun.

Tournament will be held April 28-29. Register online in 30 seconds at www.recports.ttu.edu or sign up in room 203 at the Student Rec Center by April 26th. You won't want to miss it!

Wiffle Ball Tournament

The Tech Student Hecklers and Rec Sports are teaming up for a Old Skool game of Wiffle Ball next Saturday prior to the Tech Baseball game. This 6 on 6 tournament is free to enter and food is provided. Why wouldn't you come? It's open to all students but you must register before Saturday. Tournament will be held Saturday, April 23 from 9am to 1:45pm. Register at www.recports.ttu.edu.

Aquatic Center

Don't Sweat The Technique

If you have been interested in participating in the last two Swim Stroke Mechanics Clinics but have been unable to attend here's another chance. The Aquatic Center will be having another Swim Stroke Mechanics Clinic on April 17th at 1pm. For those interested registration is at the Aquatic Center, any questions call 742-3896

Lifeguarding Classes Still Available

Thinking about becoming a lifeguard? The Aquatic Center is offering its LAST Lifeguarding Class of the Semester! Sign up at the Aquatic Center Today. This course will be held on Saturday and Sunday from 8am to 6pm starting April 23rd until May 1st. Learn more by checking out the Rec Sports web site at www.recports.ttu.edu or by visiting the Aquatic Center.

FITNESS/WELLNESS

The Event Sure To Be 2x The Fun

REC Aquathlon

The Rec Aquathlon is next week. The competition for all levels, combines a 400 yard swim and a 4 mile bike. Have you completed your entry form yet? It is Saturday, April 23 at 11:00 am. Register in the Fitness/Wellness Center by April 20 for the individual race, which is $10 for Tech and $15 for community, or as a team, which is $15 for Tech and $20 for community. After April 20, there is a $5 late fee added to the entry fee. All entries receive a tshirt and there are great prizes and drawings. For more information, please call 742.3828 or go online at www.recports.ttu.edu.

Wellness Blood Screenings Tomorrow

Did FitTech raise your awareness that making good health decisions requires knowing baseline information about your body? Every adult is encouraged to "know their numbers" and you can get these results tomorrow at the Wellness Blood Screenings to be held in the Fitness/Wellness Center. UMC's Healthsource will draw blood. Results of Blood tests include Lipid Profile ($10), Glucose ($5) Wellness Chemistry profile ($25), CBC ($20), Iron ($10), Thyroid ($15), Colon Cancer Screening Kit ($10), PSA ($20), Blood Type ($15), C-Reactive Protein ($30), Homocysteine ($35) and Bone Density ($15). For complete descriptions please go to www.recports.ttu.edu. Please register today at noon by calling 742.3828. Make a commitment to better health. Begin by learning your current blood levels and continue with exercise, better nutrition and stress management.
